

Roosevelt Plan to Keep Taxes Down Is Reported

President Believed To Have Surprise Economies in Store For Next Session

By Cecil B. Dickson

President Roosevelt is planning to propose some surprise economies to the January session of Congress designed to keep next year's budget around $9,000,000,000 and to preclude the necessity for new taxes, informed Democratic leaders disclosed last night.

Mr. Roosevelt was reported "using his blue pencil with alacrity" on Bureau Budget estimates—much to the dismay of New Deal spenders—with a view to restricting the deficit in the coming fiscal year to about $2,000,000,000.

The sharp upturn in business and employment in the past four months, which White House economic advisers expect to be sustained far into 1940, has prompted the President to count on a big increase in revenues and less demand for relief outlays.

Billion Revenue Expected

A record $7,000,000,000 revenue return from existing tax rates is considered likely if the present volume of business and employment is maintained, a high Administration source said. For the fiscal year ending last July 1, the Government's income amounted to about $5,688,000,000, while expenditures reached $9,210,000,000.

With this prospect and a well-known disposition in Congress to forego action on tax legislation in the 1940 election year, it was indicated the Administration had dropped all proposals for raising levies in the coming session, even a national defense tax.

Sharp slashes in spending appropriations also are to be proposed by President Roosevelt. Decision has been made asking for any new PWA appropriation and it was considered likely that $1,100,000,000 would be asked for WPA, a reduction of $225,000,000 under the current outlay.

Sees King and Harrison

President Roosevelt yesterday talked over the budget and revenue outlook with two Senators, Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, and King, of Utah, ranking Democrat on the committee, and both heralded his plans.

After lunch with the President, Harrison said they were pleased with recent increases in Federal revenue and then broadly hinted that there would be no tax bill at the coming session.

"The way revenues are coming in gladdens our hearts," said Harrison. "If, coupled with these receipts, we can cut down expenses, we might get along without further taxes."

Would Prevent Deficits

King's conference came earlier, shortly after the President had returned from a week-end at Hyde Park. As an advocate of a balanced budget, King said:

"The President expressed interest in a policy that would prevent large deficits."

Only last week King said in a speech that if Congress appropriated more money in 1940 than in the current year, taxes would have to be increased.

At a press conference late in the day, Secretary Morgenthau said the Treasury had no tax program to present to Congress, but pointed out that he was speaking only for his department "and not for the Administration."

Conferences Indicated

Only recently Chairman Marriner S. Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, espoused a new revenue raising program. This brought a statement from Undersecretary of the Treasury Hanes, in charge of Treasury tax studies, that Mr. Eccles was not speaking for the Treasury.

'Horse and Buggy' Traffic Rush-Hour Chaos Halts Test Car 42 Times

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

Washington has a daily rush-hour scene of congestion and chaos comparable to that of few cities of its size in the country. It is generally agreed that present methods of signal-light timing fail to meet the needs of mass traffic flow.

To test traffic-light timing under actual driving conditions, The Post sent an observer to tour major arteries under varying circumstances. The first test trip was made in rush hours on a normal Washington day.

It was 4:30 p. m. and several thousand motorists had but one idea in mind—to get home. And whether they lived in Chevy Chase, Spring Valley, Anacostia or Brightwood, they obviously wanted to get there with a minimum of wasted time.

The test journey started at Third street and Constitution avenue northwest. Not the shortest, but the longest and most congested route to Connecticut avenue and Macomb street was selected. This was done to observe the progress of motorists who live at intermediate points along the way and have no occasion to use the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway.

Garment Workers Ask Labor Peace

Hint Return to A. F. L. if Dispute Is Not Settled by Next Convention

By William H. Lawrence
United Press Staff Writer

The International Ladies Garment Workers Union, a rich organization with 250,000 members, brought new pressure for labor peace last night and indicated it may rejoin the American Federation of Labor if unity is not attained by May, 1940.

The I. L. G. W. U. executive board, which quit the C. I. O. in November, 1938, on the eve of that organization's first constitution convention, adopted a resolution declaring that peace between the federation and the C. I. O. is a "primary need to the well-being and the progress of American workers."

The board stressed the union's present independent role and declared "we had hoped, and we still hope, that by the time our convention takes place in May, 1940, peace will be realized so that we might join a united labor movement."

Fights C. I. O. Union

"If peace is not accomplished by that time, the question of our continued independence or affiliation with the A. F. L. to which we belonged for 37 years, will be determined by our convention," the resolution declared.

A. F. L. President, William Green, informed of the action, said the federation would "open its doors" to the union.

Observers considered it significant that the executive board did not even mention the possibility that the convention might decide to rejoin the C. I. O. The mention of the A. F. L. alone, and the stress placed upon the length of the previous affiliation, was considered a hint that the I. L. G. W. U. leaders desire to rejoin the federation.

The belief was strengthened by the current jurisdictional battle between the I. L. G. W. U. and one of the C. I. O.'s key unions, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

The Ladies Garment Workers Union was one of the founders of the C. I. O. in November, 1935, and contributed large sums to its initial organizing campaigns. It was suspended from the A. F. L. along with other C. I. O. unions in September.

4 More Ships Sunk as Sea War Spreads

British Weigh Plans to Break Nazi Mine Drive In Reprisal Moves

By Raymond Daniell
Copyright by New York Times

London, Nov. 20. — Firmly convinced that Nazi Germany has embarked on an unrestrained campaign of mine warfare against neutral as well as Allied shipping, the British turned tonight to consideration of improved methods for defense and reprisals.

Four more ships, all British, were added to the list of sea casualties today, bringing to at least ten the merchant marine losses since last Thursday.

Sinkings reported today were: Arlington Court, 4,915 tons, sunk Thursday by a submarine 200 miles off the Irish coast; 22 rescued, 11 missing, 1 killed.

Pensilva, 4,258 tons, sunk "by enemy action" in the North Sea; crew rescued.

17 Sailors Rescued

A Danish fishing boat brought to port 17 members of the crew of an unidentified craft blown up off the northeast coast of Scotland. The survivors reported their ship sank so fast they did not have time to launch a boat. Three of the crew were missing.

Dispatches from Iceland said an unidentified freighter steaming westward off the south coast of the island had been sunk by gunfire from a warship. Although at least one of the German pocket battleships is reported in the North Atlantic, it was believed the merchant ship was German, the attack British.

Twenty-two survivors of the Arlington Court were landed at an Irish port late tonight, all suffering from three and a half days of exposure in open boats.

British Weigh Menace

The Arlington Court's second officer, Claude Boothby, said two torpedoes were fired without warning. The ship sank within 30 minutes. Twenty-two members of the crew crowded into one lifeboat, eight into another and three into a jollyboat. The latter two boats are believed to have foundered in the heavy seas. The Dutch ship which rescued the 22 searched in vain for the other two boats before heading to port.

To meet the new menace Britain took steps toward increasing the safety of its own and of neutral vessels approaching its ports by increasing the activity of its mine-sweeping trawlers, perfecting methods of detecting, and of exploding the magnetic mines which lie at the bottom of the sea until ships pass over them.

Next the country's leaders turned their thoughts toward devising a way of making Germany's latest threat to its commerce more costly than profitable.

It is thought that the admiralty and the ministry for economic warfare favor an extension of contraband control to the exports as well

Flint Hero's Fight Just a Fancy But It Made His Mother Proud

Writes U. S. Crew Armed With Axes Faced Nazi Guns and Retook Ship Before Norwegians Acted; Claims Black Eye

By the Associated Press

Norfolk, Va., Nov. 20.—The captive crew of the American steamer City of Flint subdued the German prize crew in a hand-to-hand battle to take control of the vessel before it was released by Norwegian naval officials November 3 at Haugesund, according to a letter received here today from John Edward Webb, 25, a member of the City of Flint's crew.

"We took the ship away from the Germans ourselves," Webb wrote in the letter to his mother, Mrs. J. T. Webb, of Berkeley, where her son makes his home when ashore.

"I got a big black eye out of it," the letter continues, "but I do not care; that was one hell of a fight. We had nothing but fire axes and clubs, where they had guns. One of the fellows got shot in the leg, and then there a free-for-all began."

In bringing his letter to a close, Webb wrote:

"We are going to England from here (if we get there). We all are set for anything that may happen from now on."

Officials Scoff

Officials in Washington laughed heartily last night when informed of the letter from Seaman John Edward Webb, reporting a fight for possession of the City of Flint.

One who had been in close touch with progress of the City of Flint case from the time of her capture by Germans until her release by the Norwegian government, and has seen the full report of Capt. Joseph A. Gairdner, City of Flint master, commented on the chucks:

"That's one for the book."

Community Chest Needs $481,000 to Reach Goal

Nearly a half million dollars short of their $2,000,000 goal, and with only a day and a half to campaign, Community Chest volunteers were determined to double their efforts today so the fund drive would not fail the city's human needs.

Pledges yesterday rose to $1,518,722—75.93 per cent of the goal—as solicitation leaders reported gifts of $178,373 from 22,086 new contributors. The final report will be made at noon tomorrow, on the ninth day of the drive.

Significance of the drive's failure to pass the three-quarters mark and reach the $2,000,000 goal was stressed yesterday by Herbert L. Willett, jr., director, at a conference of the campaign executive committee. He said that the 69 Chest agencies would be able to carry on their daily services for only nine months of the year.

"In human services that means 51,600 fewer days' care which we can give to children sheltered within the walls of our eight Community Chest supported institutions," Willett declared. He continued:

"It means 6,325 fewer days' care to the ailing babies and children in our convalescent homes. It means 29,862 fewer visits by visiting nurses to give care to the needy sick and their own homes. It means 26,600 fewer days of hospital care can be purchased for desperately ill needy persons. It means that 2,500 more of our neighbors must have their appeals for aid rejected when misfortune strikes."

Campaign leaders who conferred with Director Willett and General Chairman Chauncey G. Parker, jr., included Gen. Frank T. Hines, Charles B. Dulcan, sr., Thomas P. Morgan, jr., William W. Wheeler, Campaign Manager Randolph G. Bishop, Coleman Jennings, president of the Chest; Mrs. A. Chambers Oliphant, Clifford Folger, Richard H. Wilmer and Bruce R. Allen.

The Government unit was closest to raising its quota at the end of the eighth report meeting yesterday when the day's reports of 14,078 pledges for $71,294 brought the unit

2-Gun Girl Kills Attorney

'He Hounded Me To Death,' She Says; He Stabbed Her

Dallas, Tex., Nov. 20 (P).—Blonde Corinne Maddox fished two guns from her handbag today on Main street and shot down Brooks C. Coffman, 40-year-old lawyer, accused of stabbing her last spring because she refused to accompany him to California. Coffman died within a half hour of two bullet wounds.

Witnesses told Detective Inspector Will Fritz the young woman emptied one gun, ignoring the screams of the victim. She replaced it in her purse, took out another, dropped the purse and pursued Coffman across the street.

After the shooting she retrieved the purse and appeared at a telephone office with an automatic and a six-shooter.

"He hounded me to death," the 26-year-old former stenographer told Fritz. "I didn't want to do it, but what else could I do?"

"He called me at my home and told me he would kill me if I appeared against him in court," she added.

Coffman, charged with assault to murder in the ice-pick stabbing of Miss Maddox May 20, was to have gone on trial October 9, but the case was postponed because she had not recovered from her wounds.

Fritz, in charge of the questioning, constructed this story from her statements:

For more than a month she had planned to kill Coffman. This morning, she said, she waited in a beauty shop for Coffman. He came along with a woman, who police did not immediately identify.

1,200 Czech Students Held

Prague Puts Them Into Concentration Camps for Uprising

By the Associated Press

Prague, Nov. 20.—Approximately 1,200 students have been sent to concentration camps in connection with recent demonstrations which led to the execution of 12 Czechs, it was announced officially tonight.

Parents and relatives and others making inquiries or attempting intervention were advised that such steps were "purposeless."

The conflict between dissident Czechs and the German-established government of the protectorate of Bohemia-Moravia began with clashes on October 28, the twenty-first anniversary of the founding of the former Czechoslovakia republic.

A student injured on that day died last Wednesday, precipitating anti-German demonstrations which were said to have resulted in the shooting by firing squads of nine students, two policemen and an unidentified Czech.

A survey today showed eight Czech universities and academies, including the university and theological faculties of Prague and Brno, have been closed for three years.

Several thousand Czechs had been arrested by the Schutzstaffel (Elite Guard) troops.

Japan Angers U. S.

By William V. Nessler
Post Staff Writer

A new wave of Japanese restrictive measures, endangering the welfare of several hundred civilian Americans in Tientsin, China, last night aroused fresh and emphatic resentment in official circles here.

Over repeated protests and clear exposition of this country's stand that the activities are illegal, Japanese in control of Tientsin, Washington officials were informed have interfered with the bringing of food and other supplies into the foreign concessions in the city and have brought about a "critical" fuel situation as winter weather is setting in.

Anger has arisen here over reports from Consul General John K. Caldwell that the Japanese-created transit difficulties for American goods have steadily increased in recent days. Permission to bring coal to the concession has been refused to Americans though ample supplies are easily available across the river.

Press reports emphasize the difficulties faced by Americans and other foreign residents of the blockaded concessions. Americans were described in an Associated Press dispatch as trying to bring in baskets of coal by jinrikisha and automobile. The United States Marines detachment there, unable to obtain coal for the last ten days, was reported attempting to arrange for supplies to be brought by boat down the Hai River from well-stocked yards near the city. The British concession, it was said, will be without light, power and water within ten days unless Japanese admit supplies.

The United States most decidedly insists that Americans have a right to carry on trade there without interference. Acting Secretary of State Welles said yesterday in commenting on the reports from Caldwell, He said that while local authorities at Tientsin were taking up the increasing difficulties daily with the Japanese officials, this country's general views had been made very clear.

The approaching crisis in American-Japanese relations, due when this country's abrogation of the existing commercial treaty between the two governments becomes effective two months hence, received fresh attention with the reports from Tientsin.

6-Month Notice Given

It was made clear at the State Department that while there have been some reports of Tokyo's intention to seek negotiation of a modus vivendi for the continuation of trade relations, there are no negotiations whatever under way looking to the forestalling of a rupture of treaty-covered commerce.

It was generally understood that the United States gave Japan the

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

No one in the Capital could have been more flabbergasted by the rumor that Jim Farley would resign if Roosevelt decides to run for a third term than Farley himself—unless it was FDR.

In Farley's role as the Democrats' national chairman, the President is just one of the possible candidates—and he has been careful not to commit himself about any of them.

So he has not attacked the Roosevelt candidacy nor any of the other names. He has not even mentioned the name of McNutt's or Farley's. He has not even mentioned the name of McNutt's or Farley's. He has not even mentioned the name of McNutt's or Farley's.

There has been a quiet rumor that Roosevelt and Farley have never discussed a third term. This is nonsense. They have gone into it thoroughly. But Farley has never told a soul what was said.

Another quiet rumor is that Farley is sending third persons to the White House to tell the President how he feels about a third term. Next he'll be calling himself on the phone to discuss Farley's chances in 1940. Farley has little or no hesitancy in telling Roosevelt personally what he thinks.

There has been a quiet rumor that Roosevelt and Farley have never discussed a third term. This is nonsense. They have gone into it thoroughly. But Farley has never told a soul what was said.

I learn at the radio commission that broadcasting has now been reduced to such accuracy that the range of a station can be estimated within a few feet. You might get Elliott Roosevelt on one side of the room and Father Coughlin at another set across the room on the same wavelength.

To illustrate: If you were in a room at the extreme listening limit halfway between two stations 300 miles apart each with a 150-mile range, you could tune in each on the edge of the room nearest to it.

But you couldn't get the same station on the set across the room, and there would be a blank area in the middle of the room, from one wall to the other, where you couldn't tune in either one.

Probably that would be precisely the place you'd want to put your radio; it might be the only available wall space.

At last someone has written a whole book on how to get things from the Government. (As if the rudder of the ship of state weren't already clogged with people trying to get things.)

It is "The Government at Your Service," by Archie Robertson, and it tells (for example) how to get jobs, reserve commissions in the Army, free maps or help in planning your vacation.

Bureau officials may be peeved if they get a flood of additional requests for things; but members of Congress, who have always been the intermediaries, will be happy to see their constituents go direct to the right bureau.

Some governments would suppress books like that. Or columnists for mentioning them.

Someone offered to get them together, and Corcoran beat a hasty retreat. "Oh, no," he said. "You don't catch me on Ben going near that fellow. What would the Dies Committee think?"

Incidentally, if you want the Government to lend you money for a new house, it can't be a modernistic house. Officialdom is still dubious about modernistic architecture; worries about its resale value. It even eliminates modernistic touches from architects' drawings of houses where a loan is involved.

U.S. to Demand Freer Shipping Outside Zone

Nation Feels Barring Of Vessels in War Area Is Enough of Sacrifice

By Andrie Berding
Associated Press Staff Writer

The United States, having barred American ships from Europe's combat area, will insist on a minimum of interference with them elsewhere.

By interference, the Administration means not merely seizure of cargo or a portion of the cargo by a belligerent, but also undue detention of a ship through dilatory examination of her papers and cargo.

A high official, explaining the Government's determination, said the Administration believed that the United States had made sufficiently onerous sacrifices in the interests of peace, and that these sacrifices should be repaid in part by fewer restrictions on American ships traveling in lanes outside the combat zone.

The proclamation of the zone has radically changed the situation involving detention of American ships. Many ships had been putting into British ports voluntarily for examination before proceeding to neutral destinations. Sometimes British authorities took off cargo they suspected was destined ultimately for Germany.

But now the combat-zone proclamation automatically rules this out. American ships may not go to British ports at all.

Suppose, however, a British warship stops an American merchant ship outside the zone and sends her to a control point for examination. The warship is directing that vessel to do what Congress has said she could not do.

And yet this may be a logical development of the combat zone. If Britain forces an American merchantman to do the very thing Congress has forbidden the vessel to do, a sharp remonstrance might well be made by the State Department. Practically all the United States trade with Norway, Sweden and Denmark which is carried in American bottoms will be directed to Bergen.

Authorities here are firm in demanding that the combination of combat zone and British blockade shall not work to cut America off from those good customers.

In the World War, Secretary of State Lansing insisted again and again that the British should conduct their searches on the high seas and had no right to send American merchantmen into their ports for examination, thus subjecting them to losses from delay and deterioration of cargo.

Britain and France have control ports outside the combat zone. One of the most important is Gibraltar. Half-a-dozen American ships already have been stopped and searched there. Officials indicate they are watching such developments carefully, intending to see that American ships continue to go—with as little trouble as possible—to the ports still open.

Byrd Will Join North Star at Panama Canal
Boston, Nov. 20 (AP)—Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, commander of the Government Antarctic expedition, leaves by train for Washington tonight—then will travel by plane to Panama and board the supply ship North Star Wednesday.

Announcement of Byrd's plans to board the North Star came as a complete surprise, since it was believed he would sail aboard the U. S. S. Bear—his previous expedition ship, which he leased to the Government for $1.

Byrd said that the 1,434-ton supply ship would proceed immediately for Little America and "probably will not meet the Bear until we reach the ice pack."

Byrd said that the "Bear is nearly loaded," but for a new $50,000 Barkley-Grow plane due tomorrow.

Hopkins Wages Brave Fight For Business and His Health
By International News Service

In an obscure little white house in Georgetown, Harry L. Hopkins is conducting two valiant battles—one for his health and the other to make the vast facilities of the Commerce Department available to little and big business men.

A few friends and Government officials are permitted to visit him, and they disclosed yesterday that he gained 15 pounds in recent weeks and was expected back in his office early in the new year.

"Just because he is off the job," a high Commerce Department official said yesterday. "He is on the phone at 8 o'clock in the morning. He not only keeps abreast of everything going on in the department, but, being unburdened by details, he is far ahead of us on policy and in making decisions."

Appointed Last Christmas
Hopkins was made Secretary of Commerce by President Roosevelt last Christmas Day after having worked as many as 18 hours a day as WPA administrator for many years.

Despite ill health, Hopkins tackled the job of rebuilding the department, and yesterday completed a sweeping reorganization designed to decentralize and make more effective the activities of the 8,500 persons under his direction.

In his new role, Hopkins set out to make friends between business and the New Deal. Supporting him, old-time business conservatives have donated their services.

In a move to find foreign and local markets for American business, Hopkins revamped the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce and created 13 regional offices to disseminate information on trade opportunities.

Plan to Aid Defendants
A new industrial economics division, headed by Richard Gilbert, of Boston, to keep industry advised of domestic and foreign market conditions, also was set up.

Hopkins inaugurated a plan to aid corporations threatened by the Justice Department with antitrust suits.

Curran Called 'Victimizing' Idle Seamen

Maritime Commission Member's Letter Assails Union Chief

By Louis J. Schaeffle
United Press Staff Writer

Admiral Henry A. Wiley, retired, member of the United States Maritime Commission, yesterday coupled a personal attack on Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union (C. I. O.), with the charge that he is seeking to "victimize" unemployed American seamen.

In a blistering letter to the labor leader, Wiley charged that Curran "apparently is motivated by powers outside yourself and the organization," and questioned his fitness as a union chief.

"I had hoped that in time and through experience you might develop qualities of leadership worthy of the responsibilities of your office," Wiley wrote. "However, my hopes in that respect were apparently as baseless as the charges to which you now give currency."

Dispute Over Schools
The clash is the outgrowth of the Government's attempt to provide assistance to seamen beached as a result of the shipping restrictions of the new neutrality act. One proposal called for seamen thus affected to be placed in training schools operated by the maritime commission.

Wiley is in charge of these activities. He said in his letter that he had been informed that Curran had agreed at a White House conference on November 10 to the proposed enrollment plan. On the same day, Wiley wrote, Curran was advised that the commission would be prepared to take 1,000 unemployed seamen into the training camps and pay unemployed men $30 a month in addition to food, clothing and quarters.

Three days later, Wiley continued, Curran telephoned New York officials of the commission and asked when 100 seamen could be received. From November 13 to November 15, the admiral said, only 20 men eligible for enrollment appeared, and they were assigned to the Hoffman Island training station.

Pickets Appear in New York
Wiley said that on November 13 Curran telephoned him from New York and said he had decided to oppose the enrollment plan "without giving a satisfactory reason for this reversal of opinion." Three days later pickets appeared before the commission offices in New York "to publicize the campaign of misrepresentation."

These pickets, according to Wiley's letter, carried placards saying "Maritime Commission says go to the concentration camps or starve." In addition to these placards, Wiley wrote, hand bills were distributed carrying "other falsehoods designed to deceive the unemployed seamen."

"Your present scheme of capitalizing upon their misfortune would, in my opinion, deprive them of the opportunity to improve their skill, their knowledge of seamanship, and to benefit themselves generally," Wiley wrote.

(In New York Curran said he had not received the letter from Wiley, but declared: "The Maritime Commission is little more than a shipowner's lobby," the N. M. U. leader said, "it (the letter) is part of a general attack on seamen because we are now negotiating new contracts with ship owners. These attacks always come when we are negotiating new agreements.")

Replies to Handbills
Wiley wrote Curran, for the "information of those who would minimize in their distress," that the commission is not authorized by Congress to provide relief to the unemployed.

Replying to a charge in the handbills that the commission is seeking to force enrollment in "military schools," Wiley said: "The commission never did and does not propose military schools."

No military training is given at any of our schools and the Navy had no connection whatever with them."

Declaring Curran was fully aware of this situation, Wiley said that a vast majority of the seamen taking training at Hoffman Island Station were members of the Maritime Union.

Investors Sold Down River, SEC Charges

Investment Firms Shirked Duty After Crash, Report Says

By the Associated Press
The Securities and Exchange Commission charged yesterday that many managers of investment trusts "sold their investors down the river" after the market crash of 1929.

In submitting to Congress the fourth chapter of a report on investment trusts, the commission said that after the crash many managers were so anxious to get rid of their responsibility that they permitted or encouraged others to get control of the trusts without looking to the interests of the investors.

After 1929, the report said, "the managers of investment companies were burdened with the responsibilities of management, but the emoluments of such management had substantially diminished. As a consequence, many managers of investment companies were desirous of severing their connections with their investment companies."

"An era of transfers of control and acquisition and amalgamation of investment companies ensued. From 1929 to 1935, exchange offers of securities of closed-end management investment companies either in connection with a merger, consolidation or dissolution of another such company or as a preliminary thereto, totaled $330,754,000."

The commission, which has been reported unofficially to be planning to ask Congress for power to regulate mergers or ownership changes of investment trusts, charged that in some cases there was collusion between the old management and the new.

"Apparently for a consideration," it said, "some of these managers were induced to forego their fiduciary duties to their stockholders and either to co-operate actively with the acquirer in the effectuation of his objectives or at least to refrain from opposing those activities of the new management which would result in loss to the stockholders of the acquired company."

In practically no instance of disposition of control did the retiring managements insist on the maintenance of the existing investment policies of their companies or retain a membership on the directorates of the companies for the purpose of protecting the interest of public stockholders.

"Usually, only a cursory investigation of the integrity, responsibility and ability of the new management was made by retiring managers who had been well compensated for their transfer of control and management."

Sen. Johnson Backs Marsh for High Court
Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, yesterday urged President Roosevelt to appoint James A. Marsh, Democratic national committeeman, as an associate justice of the Supreme Court to fill the vacancy created by the death of Justice Butler.

In a letter to the President, Johnson declared it was "tremendously important" that the court contain a man with a "fundamental understanding of phases of the legal practice peculiar to the public land, mineral and semiarid regions."

Traffic Tickets 'Adjusted' for 55 in Week

5 Diplomats, 2 Police, Priest and Italian Warned or Excused

Five diplomats, two policemen, a priest and an Italian pedestrian who thought a policeman's whistle meant go ahead, were included among the 55 persons who had traffic tickets "adjusted" last week, the Police Department revealed yesterday. Thirty-eight persons received "warnings," 17 tickets were canceled.

The total marked a drop of four below that of last week and a drop of 26 below that noted six weeks ago. The low point so far was the week ended November 5, when only 44 tickets were "fixed." Publication followed an order by the Commissioners.

The pedestrian, one of the few to be pardoned for this type of violation, was Angelo Ferrara, of 633 Florence street northeast. The "reason" noted for his warning was: "Excitable Italian, became confused when officer blew whistle, does not understand or speak English well."

One Warned for "Noise" Walter G. Borchers, Jr., of Arlington, Va., received a warning instead of prosecution for "unnecessary noise" through the intercession of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police. This contrasts with 11 who received the police chief's assistance the week ended October 14.

The priest, the Rev. Louis Melionberger, of 1908 North Capitol street, was warned by Lieut. Weber, of the Thirteenth Precinct, because he was on an emergency sick call. His ticket was for parking in a zone in which no parking was allowed from 4 to 6 p. m.

Two on Official Business Detective Roy Blick, of First Precinct, had a ticket canceled because he was waiting to make an arrest. Private Ford E. James whose car obstructed an alley behind police headquarters, had his ticket canceled through the intercession of Capt. Ira Keck. He, too, was on official business.

Those who escaped through diplomatic immunity were Paul Zarada, of 2221 Kalorama road northwest, T. P. Summerscale, of the British Embassy; Carlos del Favro of 1302 Eighteenth street, Argentine Legation; Lieut. Count Ettore File della Torre de Santa Susanna, of the Italian Embassy and Simon Pusching, of 1939 Calvert street northwest, of the German Embassy.

Lydia Langley, of 1812 Gales street northwest, escaped with a warning in a pedestrian violation because she was an "aged woman, 70 years of age, bad eyesight, could not distinguish light."

Thyssen Reveals Nazis Threatened Him for Criticism

Zurich, Switzerland, Nov. 20 (U.P.) Fritz Thyssen, industrialist who helped the Nazi Party achieve power in Germany, said today that "threatened consequences" of his opposition to the Reich government's policies caused him to flee the country.

"As a member of the Reichstag, I expressed myself emphatically against the war and the present policy of the Reich government," Thyssen declared in a letter to the United Press. "This political attitude threatened to cause consequences which forced me to leave Germany."

Since 1928 Thyssen, who, with a small group of Rhineland bankers, supported the early Nazi cause, had been chairman of the board of the Vereinigte Stahlwerk, the Ruhr iron and steel trust. He also was chairman of the Rostahl Gemeinschaft, or affiliated steel producers.

G. W. Dean Urges Uniform Prices On Prescriptions

A plea for a "uniform and equitable" system of pricing medical prescriptions was outlined before the Washington Branch, American Pharmaceutical Association, last night by Dr. W. Paul Briggs, dean of pharmacy at George Washington University.

He told a meeting of the branch his guide would prevent druggists overcharging or undercharging customers through ignorance of cost.

Lieut. Glenn K. Smith, of the Army Medical Center, and Dr. E. F. Kelly, secretary of the association, also spoke. Dr. Orlando G. Hall presided.

Blonde Held in Lawyer's Death

Smiling Corrine Maddox, 26, surrendered yesterday to Dallas authorities after the fatal shooting of Brooks Coffman (inset), Dallas lawyer. Coffman was charged last May with stabbing Miss Maddox

Two-Gun Girl Kills Attorney on Street

SHOOT, from Page 1. and Miss Maddox followed. She said she stepped up behind him, and within 5 feet began firing. "She stood over him, firing into him," said eyewitness George Lawton, who was sitting about 20 feet away. "He was trying to hold himself up with one hand and hollering and pleading for mercy."

Assistant District Attorney Jimmy Martin, hearing the shooting, hurried to the scene and found Miss Maddox in the telephone office, telephoning the sheriff's office she wanted to surrender.

Fritz related she told of her first attempt "to get" Coffman, whom she had known for two years. "I levelled the pistol at his back and pulled the trigger," Fritz quoted her. "But the gun only clicked. I don't think Brooks ever knew about this because he didn't look back."

This, she said, was on November 1. Last Friday, she said, she again waited for Coffman, but "he was late that morning and when I finally saw him the crowd was too thick to shoot."

"So I waited. Used Lead Bullets. "Somebody told me that steel-jacketed bullets ricochet when they hit the pavement, so I bought lead bullets."

When they told her Coffman was dead, she interrupted the questioning to say: "I'm glad—it's the best thing for him. But I'm sorry for his family. It's too bad they have to suffer."

Some of them expressed mild disappointment that the prices asked by the farm cooperative were not higher, but added they thought they could get along all right.

Derrick Explains Proposal B. B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland-Virginia association, occupied the stand almost three hours, explaining the purpose of and the reasons for the marketing proposal. He was followed by several representative members of the cooperative.

One farmer, W. M. Johnson, of Manassas, Va., suggested that the cost of producing milk for Washington consumers is necessarily high because of the insistent demand for high-test butterfat content. The public, through the dairies, he said, for years has forced the farmers to produce continually richer milk.

The producers' plan for selling milk for distribution among Washington relief families was explained by Derrick but aroused little comment from the farmers.

A Family's Problems W. M. Kline, of Manassas, said he favored the idea, provided the milk is taken from surplus rather than base classification. The latter, he explained, would cut the basic price paid the producers.

Kline, who said he enlisted his two boys, one 11 and one 8, to help milk the cows, said he hoped that the marketing agreement would assure him and his family of a fair livelihood. "I got sort of discouraged the other day," he said, "when the oldest boy stopped milking a minute and said he thought he would rather be a truck driver than a dairy farmer."

Derrick, who said that the association stood ready to take a cut of 1 cent a quart on relief milk, expressed hope that further reductions could be made through cooperation of the Surplus Commodities Corporation, the distributors, and District WPA or welfare agencies.

No final retail price was mentioned although officials of the Maryland-Virginia association believe it may be 5 or 6 cents below the standard 14-cent charge. Consumer groups intend to ask for 5-cent milk when the inquiry moves to Washington on Wednesday.

There are 5,888 "cases" on District dole that are eligible for the cut-rate milk, Derrick said. The producers feel that they can afford to take a small loss now, he added, because of the knowledge that children who otherwise might not have it would get the milk-drinking habit.

Dairies Declare Farmers' Plan Would Raise Cream Price

By James D. Secrest Post Staff Writer

Warrenton, Nov. 20.—Spokesmen for Washington dairies today predicted a slight rise in the retail price of cream in the District but no increase in the 14-cent per quart charge for milk if the marketing agreement proposed by the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association is adopted.

Appearing as observers at the first of three scheduled hearings by the Agriculture Department, the distributors told The Post they "have no objection" to the Federal order requested by the producers cooperative as a means of stabilizing farm prices.

Asked whether the marketing agreement, if approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, will necessitate any increase in the retail price of milk sold for fluid consumption, J. Edwards Burroughs, Jr., one of attorneys representing the dairies, said:

"It certainly means there will be no reduction in the present 14-cent price."

Producers Disapprove Hike Burroughs, who was special counsel of the House subcommittee which conducted the milk investigation last spring, and other dairy representatives agreed that there would be no necessity for boosting the retail price unless operating expenses are increased by higher taxes or wages. The producers are asking no increase for this class of milk.

The proposed marketing agreement would grant farmers premiums on high-grade cream sold in this market and thus raise slightly the price paid by the distributors. Organized producers, who cut the wholesale price just a year ago to meet the competition of "bootleg" cream, insist that there is no reason for a retail hike.

Maryland-Virginia association officials said that the 1939 cut was not passed along entirely to the consumers and that the new increase does not absorb the difference.

Dairies Have Answer Dairy spokesmen replied that they absorbed a slight rise in the price of fluid milk and a wage increase last fall without raising the 14-cent price.

Farmers represented at today's hearings apparently were unanimously in favor of the proposed marketing agreement and order as none raised a voice in objection when invited to do so by Glenn J. Gifford, of the solicitor's office of the Agriculture Department.

Some of them expressed mild disappointment that the prices asked by the farm cooperative were not higher, but added they thought they could get along all right.

Derrick Explains Proposal B. B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland-Virginia association, occupied the stand almost three hours, explaining the purpose of and the reasons for the marketing proposal. He was followed by several representative members of the cooperative.

There are 5,888 "cases" on District dole that are eligible for the cut-rate milk, Derrick said. The producers feel that they can afford to take a small loss now, he added, because of the knowledge that children who otherwise might not have it would get the milk-drinking habit.

Uniform Pay Sought Derrick, who spoke for 1,300 producers, who sell between 87 and 90 per cent of the milk consumed in Washington, testified that the marketing agreement is necessary to force all District distributors to pay uniform prices to farmers.

Independent dairies, he said, are now able to force down the price paid nonmember producers with the result that cooperating distributors complain of unfair competition.

"Ultimately the association will be forced to lower its price or lose business," he said.

The Agriculture Department order, if adopted, would apply to all Washington distributors alike, he said, whether or not they buy from the Maryland-Virginia organization.

May Exempt Virginia Derrick asked that all "thickly settled" sections of suburban Maryland be included in the boundaries of metropolitan Washington in the enforcement of the order but proposed that suburban Virginia communities be exempt so long as the prices they pay producers are as high or higher than set forth in the marketing agreement.

He explained that producers' prices in Virginia are now fixed by a State commission and suggested that a conflict in jurisdiction might result if the Agriculture Department assumed control.

Producers in Prince Georges and Montgomery counties who do not sell milk in Washington will be paid 46 cents a hundredweight less than farmers selling to Washington dairies, he pointed out, because of the stricter health requirements of the District.

Increases Elsewhere Derrick proposed that chocolate milk and other milk drinks sold at Washington soda fountains be designated as Class I milk and be paid for accordingly. It is now Class II milk and sold at a cheaper price.

Citing general increases in prices paid by farmers for feed and other products needed to produce milk, Derrick said prices on dairy products have increased in many marketing areas since the outbreak of the war, notably in New York, Ohio, Louisville and Chicago.

Yet the Maryland-Virginia Association, he said, is actually asking a price scale 10 per cent under that of 1936 when the first marketing agreement for this area was ordered. This agreement subsequently was held invalid by the United States District Court, which was reversed by the United States Court of Appeals.

German Plane Driven Away From London

Street Crowds Watch Pursuit Craft Repel City's First Raider

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 20.—A German warplane reached the edge of London today for the first time in the war but was driven off by pursuit planes and anti-aircraft fire from the ground.

Another German plane, over the Orkney Islands, where the Scapa Flow naval base is located, was repelled by anti-aircraft guns and the admiralty announced that Nazi air raiders had "made an unsuccessful bombing attack" on a British destroyer in the southern part of the North Sea.

The air ministry later announced that "unidentified aircraft" were sighted over Kentish towns during the evening, causing a two-hour air raid alarm, the United Press said. No gunfire was heard, however.

An air raid alarm was sounded in northwestern France at 7:05 p. m. (2:05 p. m. E. S. T.) tonight, and ended 37 minutes later.

The alarm was given after a day in which the Germans made wide spread scouting flights over France, causing alert signals in widely separated parts of the country.

The German plane which reached London's outskirts drew a steady fire from anti-aircraft guns. Although the craft dodged shellbursts from batteries along the Thames estuary as it flew over the eastern outskirts of the capital, no air raid warnings were sounded here.

Subsequently the air ministry announced that British fighters had chased the raider out to sea.

In one town on the east coast crowds gathered in the streets to watch the land and air attack upon the fleeing raider. Air raid warnings were sounded for an hour in some parts of southeast England tonight before the all clear signal was given.

DNB, official German news agency, said German reconnaissance planes obtained "valuable scouting results" in flights over Scapa Flow, over southern England, over the channel coast of England and north in France.

In the London area, DNB said, pursuit planes and anti-aircraft attacked, but the great height of the German planes enabled them to escape.

Dutch Guns Kill Nazi Pilot

Roermond, The Netherlands, Nov. 20 (AP).—A German military plane apparently disabled by Netherlands anti-aircraft guns, crashed in a meadow near here today, killing the pilot. This was the third incident in as many days in which German aircraft flying over Netherlands territory have been fired on.

18 German Freighters Get Italian Colors

Geneva, Nov. 20.—It is now reported 18 German merchant vessels at Trieste are being repainted in the colors of an Italian line. On November 17, it was reported 11 were in this Italian port.

required six-months notice of abrogation of the treaty in order to clear the way for Congressional imposition of an embargo on American goods with which Japan has prosecuted her invasion of China.

The United States' abrogation notice was followed by expressions of consternation in Tokyo and, for a time, there appeared to be a conciliatory attitude toward this country.

U. S. Goods Held Up

Opening of current discussions between Japan and Russia, however, over a trade agreement, consummation of which might soften the blow of a denial of American goods, apparently has been accompanied by a resumption of activities which the American government has repeatedly denounced as infringing American rights.

Caldwell cabled the department on November 13 that while only a few American citizens had been delayed at the barricades, he had received many complaints that American goods were being held up from a few hours to more than a day. One source of delay was the Japanese requirement that loads of peanuts and coal be dumped on the street for inspection, Caldwell said.

On November 16, Caldwell cabled that there was an increase in difficulties at the barriers. According to the consul, an American rug manufacturer was forced to spread a truckload of carpets on the street for inspection, although the truck was proceeding under an American pass and a Japanese consular visa.

Caldwell said another American complained of trouble in bringing food into the concessions. He then reported the fuel situation was becoming critical, despite the ready availability of coal across the river.

Movie Strike Averted, Peace Believed in Sight

Hollywood, Nov. 20 (AP).—A strike call to 35,000 film studio craftsmen scheduled for today was averted by an emergency conference between producers and union committeemen, who predicted probable amicable settlement of the dispute.

At the producers' request, the conference was recessed until Friday afternoon. In the meantime, no further strike deadline will be set. All American Federation of Labor unionists in the studios are seeking a 10 per cent wage increase.

Spies Stole U. S. Secrets, Dies Charges

Important Military Data Taken From Detroit Plants, He Says

Detroit, Nov. 20 (AP).—Representative Dies (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the Congressional Committee Investigating Un-American Activities, said in an interview here today that Nazi and Communist agents "now across the ocean" had stolen "important information" of military value from Detroit industrial plants.

Dies was here for a one-day secret conference about such matters. The primary purpose of his committee now, he asserted, was to break up foreign spying and to prevent sabotage in industrial plants.

He cited one case of a lecturer described by him as a Nazi spy who was entertained by a patriotic society, given ready access to numerous plants, permitted to take pictures and to obtain extensive information about industrial processes.

This information is now back in Germany," he said. Dies said much information was obtained from Communist Party members disgruntled after the German-Russian alliance was announced. He added:

"I intend to talk to approximately ten of these informants today, secretly. Of course, I can't reveal their names. But I can say that four or five of them are also members of labor unions."

as imports of Nazi Germany, and have urged this course upon the cabinet. Legal authorities are understood already to have been consulted upon the legality of the scheme adopted in 1917 in reply to the unrestricted submarine warfare. Would Bar Nazi Credits

It is not believed, however, that the cabinet will approve the plan yet for fear of its effect upon such neutral countries as Italy, whose trade might be adversely affected.

Supporters of this plan point out that it would go far toward stripping Germany of foreign credits with which to purchase the war materials the fleet is seeking to prevent reaching her.

Before such drastic action is taken, however, the government wants to feel sure that neutral opinion has been aroused to a point where it will not be alienated by extension of already irksome regulations of the contraband control. It wishes also to be assured of the soundness of its legal position for, contrary to charges in Germany, the British prize courts are unpolitical bodies which might be expected to rule against the government as quickly as for it, if it entertained doubts about interpretations of international law.

However, the feeling is growing in official circles as well as unofficial quarters that Germany, after three months of war, has shown the same disregard for the conventions of civilized warfare that Germany showed under the Kaiser after three full years, and that the time has come to take steps at least as drastic as those of the unrestricted warfare stage of the World War.

Today's losses raised the known British toll to 72 ships, more than five times the German loss of 14. France has lost seven, for a total of 93 among the belligerents.

Neutral losses, Norway, 11; Sweden, 8; Finland and Greece, 5 each; Netherlands 4; Lithuania 3; Denmark 2, and Russia, Belgium, Rumania, Italy and Yugoslavia, 1 each. Total, 43.

The number of persons lost in the sinking Saturday of the Simon Bolivar was reduced to a casualty list of 85 missing and dead issued by the agents of the steamer. Previous authoritative estimates had placed the dead and missing at 140.

The agents' casualty list comprised 40 men, 27 women and 18 children killed and missing. Moved by the sinking of the Simon Bolivar Dutch ship operators yesterday ordered more than 1,000 passengers on three Netherlands ships to disembark at Lisbon rather than face the perils of the North Sea. These ships were the Oranje, the Jan Pieterszoon Coen and the Johan De Witt, all bound for northern Europe.

Other Vessels Listed

Other vessels sunk in the last three days were:
Simon Bolivar, Netherlands, 8,309 tons; 85 missing or dead.
Grazia, Italian, 5,857 tons; 5 killed, 29 rescued.
Blackhill, British, 2,492 tons; crew of 22 rescued.
B. O. Borjesson, Swedish, 1,586 tons; 6 lost, 13 rescued.

Carica Milica, Yugoslav, 6,371 tons; crew rescued.

Kaunas, Lithuanian, 1,521 tons; one dead.

Kuhn Bund Theft Not Proved 'Beyond Doubt,' Judge Declares

Prosecutor Indicates He Will Reopen Case; Wife May Be Called

New York, Nov. 20.—A declaration that the prosecution had failed to show "beyond reasonable doubt" that Fritz Kuhn had stolen money from his German-American bund was made today by Judge James G. Wallace in the bundsfehrer's larceny trial.

At this expression of judicial dissatisfaction with the nature of testimony thus far offered, Assistant District Attorney Herman McCarthy immediately indicated the State would reopen its case.

At the end of a court session which at one point had been overlaid with open hilarity, as McCarthy had sought to cross-examine himself to prove he had no "animus" toward Kuhn, Judge Wallace told the young prosecutor:

"You haven't proved everything beyond a reasonable doubt. Merely because he (Kuhn) didn't deposit all of this money (collected by the bund) does not prove that he stole it. You must prove it was done with intent to defraud . . . and if any of the money was spent for legitimate bund purposes, that expenditure does not constitute larceny."

McCarthy hurriedly answered that, although the prosecution had rested last week, it would offer what he termed indisputable evidence before the case was finally ended.

Judge Wallace's remarks followed defense testimony which contradicted earlier State testimony intended to show that among Kuhn's alleged peculations was the misappropriation of $500 intended to have been paid to James D. C. Murray, a private attorney for legal services.

William Luedtke, of Lodi, N. J., treasurer of the German-American Business League, a bund affiliate, swore that on July 8, 1938, Kuhn had given him $500 in cash and that he had paid the money over to Daniel Kirshman, Murray's assistant, obtaining a receipt which he said he gave to Kuhn.

G. Wilhelm Kunze, of Philadelphia, a subordinate bund leader, testified that he had seen in bund headquarters in New York a letter from Murray which bore a pencilled notation indicating that the $500 had been paid.

The judge himself took over examination of the last witness of the day, Benjamin Blattner, an accountant for the district attorney's office, who earlier in the trial had materially revised downward his estimates of the shortage claimed to exist in the Bund's books.

This time, Blattner was questioned in detail as to how he arrived at his conclusion that there was a shortage of $8,510 in proceedings from a bund rally of last February—a shortage which is the basis for two counts not involved in the present trial but which McCarthy said he dealt with as "a similar transaction."

After exhibiting impatience at the accountant's answers, Judge Wallace finally announced: "I'll instruct the jury right now that there is no proof at this time that the defendant stole any money as a result of the Madison Square Garden affair (the rally)."

As the court was adjourned for the day, with the prospect that the trial might be ended tomorrow, McCarthy said he had three witnesses to call in rebuttal. There was no indication as to whether Kuhn or his wife would take the stand.

McCarthy's attempt to cross-examine himself had caused such unrestrained guffawing from the few spectators still permitted in the courtroom that Judge Wallace banged his fist, instead of a gavel, to restore order.

It was followed by introduction of State testimony to show that Milton Schilback, another assistant district attorney, was not a Jew, and in turn by an unsuccessful demand by Defense Attorney Peter L. F. Sabba-tino for a mistrial. He cried out angrily to the judge:

"No one accused him of being a Jew."

Kuhn's wife, Elsa, made her first appearance in the courthouse, amid indications that the defense might have her testify as to her portly, middle-aged husband's relations with other women.

Schilback and McCarthy were but two in a lengthening list of public officials—called as defense witnesses by Sabbatino in his avowed effort to show that the Kuhn prosecution was motivated by "politics" and "hatred."

Both were questioned particularly about the raising of Kuhn's bail last September from $5,000 to $50,000 and they gave mutually corroborative testimony that this was done in fear that the bund leader was preparing to flee to Mexico.

Telegraph Firms To Observe Both Thanksgivings

November 23 or November 30—It makes no difference to America's telegraph companies. They'll sing Thanksgiving greetings into your phone at any hour of either day.

Sung to such tunes as "Auld Lang Syne," the quatrains are full of sentiments of peace and freedom "in the good old U. S. A." If you want to send greetings to a friend in Plymouth, Mass., next Thursday, you may be advised that he would probably rather hear from you on November 30.

And if you don't know what date is being celebrated in Central Idaho, the companies will advise you.

Plump pilgrims and turkeys, red Indians and pumpkins will appear on the usual delivered greeting forms.

Japan, Russia Argue on Site Of Negotiations

Soviet Wants Talks Held in Moscow; Trade Pact Sought

By G. E. R. Gedy
Copyright by New York Times

Moscow, Nov. 20.—The official statement here that a common ground has been reached for a Soviet-Japanese trade agreement indicates more positive progress than does the simultaneous announcement of the establishment of a mixed commission to settle the Manchukuo-Mongol border dispute.

Actually no concrete trade negotiations have yet been opened. The Soviet government is urging that these should be started in Moscow immediately. The Japanese are trying to arrange that all negotiations should be held in Tokyo.

Soviet-Japanese trade has been almost nonexistent since the recognition of the Soviet Union by Japan. The Japanese Embassy here has no commercial attaché and no commercial staff. It is on these grounds that Ambassador Togo has asked Premier Molotov to let the projected negotiations take place in Japan. Molotov, however, urges the dispatch of a special commercial mission to Moscow.

Japanese Hail Move
Although the initiative of the Russians is obvious, it is not denied in Japanese circles that an agreement would be welcomed that would regularize the trading between the two countries. What is being explored is the possibility of a general agreement on the most favored nation basis.

The unusual prominence given in the Soviet press to these developments shows the intense eagerness of the Soviet government to reach a general political settlement with Japan.

Japanese circles here insist that the Soviet Union has made no suggestion of a nonaggression treaty, or any other political pact, though it is admitted that political considerations are behind all the recent current talks. Japanese still profess the belief that the Soviet Union cannot afford to abandon the cause of Chinese resistance to Japan and that this will prove an obstacle to any general political pact between Russia and Japan.

Trading Restricted

Trading between the Soviet Union and Japan since 1925 has been restricted to payment by Japan for the Chinese-Eastern Railway, running through Manchukuo. Judging by what was supplied by Japan as part payment for the railway, the minor trade transactions during the long treatyless period, what Russia would like from Japan would be primarily fishing nets and fishing gear, including refrigeration canning vessels, for the Kamchatka fisheries. Whether Japan could supply these is doubtful.

Obviously Japan would gladly provide piece goods, in fact all kinds of consumers' goods. But the Soviet government is unlikely to accept such deliveries from Japan.

In the past Russia has supplied Japan from adjacent areas with oil and iron, which Japan would be glad to receive again. But whether Russia, in view of her internal needs, the difficulties of obtaining foreign supplies under present conditions and her obligations to Nazi Germany, could supply these now is very doubtful.

Doughboys Won't Kill Bugler Now; Reveille Call Sweetened

is being initiated to prevent confusion, now that large bodies of troops are being concentrated for mass maneuvers. Some of the outfits will be getting up at 3 a. m. for advance scouting, while others will be allowed to lie abed to the late hour of 5 or even 5:45.

If successful, each regiment at the larger posts will be assigned a "signature" which will be added to all bugle calls. For the time being, it will be on trial. During the test period, the buglers will try the "signature" as prelude as well as a sign-off.

At Ease, Private Blank:
Difficulty is foreseen with both. If given last, the whole camp has to stay awake to see whether it means them. If blown first, they may wake up in time to know who is wanted.

Officials see the move as equally, if not more important, for calls during the day. Private Joe Blank has just gotten his boots off and is taking his ease, cooling his dogs in the breeze, when he hears "Assembly." He swears at every one from the colonel to the top-kick, grabs his rifle, and runs to the company street, only to find it's the outfit next door that is wanted.

This sort of thing has been going on for years at the larger posts and during concentrations for war games. But the Army is conservative and slow to change from a method that worked all right at the frontier post days, when a bugle call meant every man-jack in the little garrison.

James E. Mackley, War Hero, Buried In Arlington

Funeral services for James Edward Mackley, 50, Treasury Department accountant who died Thursday in Mount Alto Veterans' Hospital, were held yesterday at his residence, 3701 West Pershing drive, Arlington. He was buried in Arlington Cemetery.

A native of Middleburg, Frederick County, Md., Mr. Mackley had formerly been associated with the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co.

A member of 311th Army Infantry during the World War, he was wounded in action and decorated with the Order of the Purple Heart and several other citations.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Virginia Bouie Mackley; a sister, Mrs. Mary Griffin, and three brothers, Charles W., John H. and Jacob H. Mackley, of Frederick, Md.

San Franciscans Split on Value Of Convention

San Francisco, Nov. 20 (AP).—San Franciscans who should know disagreed today as to how much the city wants to spend to hold their 1940 national convention here.

They agreed only that San Francisco would be willing to pay more for the convention if the 1939 fair opens in 1940. When and if the "fair in '40" committee completes financial arrangements to continue the exposition, General Manager W. G. Swanson of the San Francisco convention and tourist bureau said he would start raising a $300,000 purse.

"It's not worth that," commented George Smith, hotel man who raised a quarter of a million in an unsuccessful bid for the 1938 convention. "We'll make a bid for the convention, but we aren't going to be ridiculous. They'll be lucky to get $200,000."

Relief At Last For Your Cough

Creomulsion relieves promptly because it goes right to the seat of the trouble to loosen germ laden phlegm, increase secretion and aid nature to soothe and heal raw, tender, inflamed bronchial mucous membranes. No matter how many medicines you have tried, tell your druggist to sell you a bottle of Creomulsion with the understanding that you are to like the way it quickly allays the cough or you are to have your money back.

CREOMULSION for Coughs, Chest Colds, Bronchitis

While the formal Army directive ordering the trial move makes no exceptions, many here hoped that the beautiful strains of taps, which put Army men to sleep each night, might stand as it is. The practical reasons for the "signature" calls do not apply, for by invariable Army rule, its soft tones sound at all posts for everyone at 11 p. m. sharp.

Staff Sgt. Frank Witchee, the Army's No. 1 bugler, who blew taps at the burial of the Unknown Soldier 18 years ago, said last night that he was "shocked at even the thought of changing the call."

Witchee, now retired and living in Arlington, said he was "much surprised and interested" in the new plan, but a bit skeptical.

"I don't see much advantage in the idea," he told The Post. "It may be all right, but I've never seen any need for it. But they certainly shouldn't change taps."

"No one will ever write music for the bugle that can take its place. Only the church call among the Army's 100 bugle calls brings out anything like the deep feeling and wonderful musical values of taps."

2 Wrecks, 4 Fires, But No Casualties Follow Collision

A six-wheeled trailer-truck last night collided with a light automobile at Florida and New York avenues northeast with the following results:

Two wrecks, four fires and no one hurt.

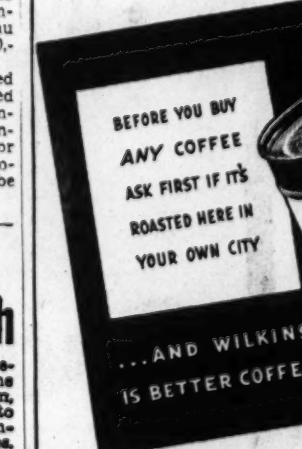

The crash ignited the truck's gas tank, the trailer and its 385 bushels of wheat went up in flames. The automobile was burned and a parked auto and nearby home also caught on fire.

Driver of the truck, Troy Cheek, 19, of Silver City, N. C., and the motorist, C. H. Christmond, 22, of 1007 Monroe street northwest, were shaken up a bit.

Martial Law Invoked as 21 Die in India

Scores Hurt in Riots At City of Sukkur; Nationalists Seethe

By International News Service

Karachi, India, Nov. 20.—With political unrest seething throughout India, heavily armed police and deputies patrolled the industrial city of Sukkur tonight after a proclamation of martial law clamped the lid on violent demonstrations resulting in deaths of 21 persons.

The fighting, in which scores were injured, grew out of two days of stubborn outbreaks characterized by British officials as "religious," but said by Indian leaders to be an outgrowth of the self-rule campaign inspired by Mohandas K. Gandhi's All-India National Congress.

In connection with the Sukkur battles, Congress spokesman recalled a recent statement by Gandhi charging Britain with raising "false issues," such as Hindu-Muslim religious differences, to divide native unity on the demands for immediate self-rule.

Ten persons were killed today in rioting prior to the declaration of martial law. Eleven others died yesterday, including six Muslims and five Hindus.

In both battles police and other armed authorities exchanged shots with demonstrating crowds and missiles were thrown.

Supporters of Gandhi and the Congress, which controls eight of the 11 provincial parliaments, had until recently swung the Hindu government of Sind Province, in which Sukkur is located, over to their side on the self-rule issue, it was understood.

Subsequent to outbreak of the European war the British Congress leaders charged, won over the Sind ministry by promises that self-rule for India will be considered by London after the conflict against Germany is over.

Gandhi and the Congress have declared their mistrust of the British government's promise and demanded Indian independence immediately as the nationalists' price for active Indian cooperation in the war.

In the last few weeks a campaign of non-cooperation with the British government, called by Gandhi, has been in progress in the states controlled, to result in violence.

Two lengthy conferences between the viceroy, Lord Linlithgow, and Gandhi resulted in completed deadlock.

Common Sense About Constipation

A doctor would tell you that the best thing to do with any ailment is to get at its cause. If you're constipated, don't fiddle with makeshift remedies. Find out what's giving you the trouble!

Chances are you won't have to look very far if you eat just the things most people do. Most likely you don't get enough "bulk"! And "bulk" doesn't mean just a lot of food. It means a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulk" mass in the intestines and helps a bowel movement.

If this is what you lack, your ticket is crisp crunchy Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast. It contains the "bulk" you need plus the intestinal tonic, vitamin B₁, and it's not a drug, not a medicine. Eat All-Bran every day, drink plenty of water, and join the "regulars"! Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

Student Meeting To Open Friday

With the slogan, "Education for Practical Democracy," the first Washington Student Conference will open Friday and continue sessions through Sunday at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets northwest.

Katherine F. Lemrool, chief of the Children's Bureau and member of the President's Advisory Committee on Education; Tom L. Popejoy, NYA deputy administrator, and U. Simpson Tate, treasurer of the National Negro Congress, will speak at the opening session.

Figures, in Court, So, So Confusing To Sally Rand

San Francisco, Nov. 20 (AP).—Sally Rand, of fan and bubble fame, made a personal appearance before a standing-room-only audience in Bankruptcy Court today, and said really couldn't explain very much about her tangled finances.

"You'll have to ask my attorney, Mr. Walsh, about that," she said frequently, in reply to question about her assets, posed by Arthur P. Shapiro, attorney for John O. Englund, receiver for her estate.

The documents filed say the estate consists of $8,067 in some very doubtful assets; debts about $64,631.

British Air Orders Ahead of Schedule

Burbank, Calif., Nov. 20 (AP).—Lockheed Aircraft Corporation reported today the last airplanes of a June, 1939, British air ministry order for 250 reconnaissance bombers would leave the assembly line this week.

The $27,000,000 order thus will be filled seven and a half weeks ahead of the contract date, in the record time of 42 weeks—for an average production of six large twin-motored planes a week. The company has a $10,000,000 contract with the Australian government for 100 bombers of a similar type.

Prince Otto, At 27, Stands Nearer Throne

Allied Victory May Make Him Austria's Emperor

By Edward Beattie, Jr. United Press Staff Writer.

Brussels, Nov. 20.—Otto Von Hapsburg, handsome prince who has not seen his Austrian homeland since the empire's collapse, celebrated his twenty-seventh birthday today more nearly an emperor than he has ever been in his life.

By a freak of European political tumult, the Hapsburg dynasty, which was deposed by the last European war, may regain its place in this war. If it does, it can thank the Allied powers which 25 years ago were drawn into war against Austria—as Germany's ally—in defense of the freedom of small nations, just as the present war began.

The Big "It"—Allied Victory

To date, the restoration of Otto to a throne in Vienna has been a matter as quiet as the king-making plots of the Renaissance because the project depends entirely on a complete Allied victory. Leaders in Britain and France, however, often discuss the partition of Germany into a number of small principalities. A scheme already has taken definite shape in London and Paris to follow this line to stabilize south-central Europe.

It calls for the creation of a Danubian federation, including Austria, Hungary, Bohemia, Moravia, Rumania, Yugoslavia, possibly Bulgaria and—if the Allies win a smashing victory—even Bavaria. These nations would be linked in a customs union and by the closest possible political ties but otherwise would be autonomous.

Two Hurdles

There are two main difficulties to be overcome, even if and when the Allies win a complete victory. In many Balkan quarters it is feared that restoration of the Hapsburg dynasty would mean that Austria would tend gradually to dominate the other states in the federation. The other hurdle is that the Czech government in exile desires a federation not with Vienna but with Warsaw, on the basis of their new cordiality with the Poles.

It is believed that the first difficulty may be overcome. As far as the second is concerned, many responsible political circles visualize a Danube federation and a Vistula federation cooperating closely and acting as a barrier from the Baltic to the Black Sea to Russian expansion on one hand and to German expansion on the other.

Monarchists Celebrate

Budapest, Nov. 20 (U.S.)—Special church services and monarchist demonstrations throughout Hungary today marked the celebration of the twenty-seventh birthday of Archduke Otto, pretender to the Hapsburg throne.

Hungary's four greatest Catholic cathedrals were crowded with aristocrats and legitimist supporters as they heard special masses for the archduke.

Kaiser's Son Denies He's Shot; Loyal to Hitler

Copyright by New York Times
Berlin, Nov. 20.—Reports abroad of open rupture between the Hohenzollern dynasty and the National Socialist regime were summarily disposed of by Prince August Wilhelm, fourth son of former Kaiser Wilhelm, in a personal statement to four score foreign journalists at today's official press conference.

The prince's denial followed a batch of rumors to the effect that members of the former Kaiser's family, including Prince August Wilhelm and others, had been incarcerated or shot for openly defying the Hitler government.

"My entire house is absolutely against all efforts to injure Germany," the prince said. "And whatever is against the Fuehrer is against Germany."

U. S. Backing Dollar Bloc For Americas

Berle Frowns on Proposal of New Monetary Unit

By Felix Cotten

The necessity for inter-American currency stabilization as a cushion against war dislocations was agreed upon unanimously yesterday by a subcommittee of the Inter-American Financial and Economic Advisory Committee.

The International News Service quoted a State Department official as saying the agreement would be referred within a few days to the full committee, whose concurrence was expected without delay.

The subcommittee, set up to consider monetary and financial problems, considered but took no action on a proposal for a new inter-American monetary unit.

The proposal, made by South American representatives, was said to have been characterized in State Department quarters as a "hardy perennial advanced unsuccessfully at many inter-American meetings in the past."

Berle Frowns on Plan
Assistant Secretary of State Adolph A. Berle, Jr., who has been attending the subcommittee's meetings as a substitute for Acting Secretary of State Welles, was represented as evincing little enthusiasm for the proposal.

The plan, it was said, was suggested as an alternative to the creation of a "dollar bloc." The State Department, however, was reported to be hopeful that the dollar, and not a new currency unit, would become the stabilization base.

The full committee, at a meeting late yesterday, discussed the "urgent" need of increasing shipping services to certain Latin-American countries suffering from a curtailment of services as a result of the war.

The committee, it was said, referred the matter for further study to the sub-committee on problems of an individual or urgent nature. It was the first problem assigned to this sub-committee.

A cablegram, it was revealed, was sent during the week-end to the conference of shipping interests which meets monthly at Cristobal, Canal Zone, urging that any increase in maritime rates be avoided and that the conference "proceed in its decisions in harmony with the broad spirit of solidarity."

Argentina Chief Objecter
A second cablegram asked finance ministers of the 20 Latin-American countries to submit without delay any problem they may have to the present inter-American commercial conference.

Some Latin-American countries, whose currencies have been tied to or are influenced by sterling, are said to object to any attempt to create a "dollar bloc" on the ground that it would be disadvantageous to them. Argentina is represented as the chief objecter.

The sub-committee on monetary and financial problems, according to the International News Service, has under consideration a proposal by sponsors of the new monetary unit plan for a survey of each republic's currency position. This survey would be intended to fix for each republic a "currency index" as a base for establishing a "monetary common denominator" for all.

The new monetary unit, on Pan-American dollar, must be based neither on gold nor silver, but on a "common denominator" representing the assumed purchasing power of the individual currencies of the American republics.

Fears U. S. Domination
Pedro Larranaga Montero, the Peruvian delegate, opposed adoption of the United States dollar as the monetary standard, although several of his colleagues favored this. It would increase, he argued, the dominance of the United States dollar in Latin-American commerce.

Sponsors of the "Pan-American dollar" idea stressed the currency stabilization advantages they said would be attained by its adoption. It would end, they insisted, currency fluctuation uncertainties and delays in payment for goods.

South American representatives on the committee, it was learned, have imposed a strict censorship on the emission of news from the committee's private meetings, which are being held at the Pan American Union.

At their suggestion, chairmen of the three subcommittees into which the committee has been divided have been designated as a virtual board of censors to pass on all announcements to the press. This is directly contrary to the declared policy of Welles, the United States delegate, who said the only reason the committee's meetings were private was the confusion caused by persons walking in and out of the meeting room.

Super-Bank Plan Delayed
Guatemala City, Nov. 20 (P).—The Pan-American treasury conference today put off for a year a definite recommendation for establishment of a central inter-American bank to encourage industrial development.

In plenary session the conference passed a compromise resolution, noting that creation of such an institution offered "delicate technical aspects" and asking experts of the inter-American economic committee at Washington to study the project.

Rockwell Kent, Who Drew Christmas Seal, Urges a Third Term for Mrs. Roosevelt

Rockwell Kent (right), renowned artist, who originated the design on this year's Christmas Seal of the National Tuberculosis Association, yesterday presented the original painting to President Roosevelt. Mrs. Ernest Grant, director of the Tuberculosis Association for the District, was present.

The artistic whirlwind that is Rockwell Kent the artist blew into Washington yesterday.

"I don't care whether Mr. Roosevelt gets a third term, but I hope Mrs. Roosevelt does," he said, over a tinkling glass.

"Wouldn't be any law against it, would there?" asked Kent.

He was off to the Y. W. C. A., as chief speaker at the annual meeting of the District of Columbia Tuberculosis Association, and to throw the serious assemblage into a study of faces, with a story illustrating how artists aren't what they used to be.

Denies He's Communist
This concluded—with the poor but pure girl melodramatically escaping the clutches of an amorous artist—Kent said present-day esthetes aren't what they used to be, necessarily. They have minds and are using them along with their material as it helps to interpret the times.

Then he denied he had communist affiliation, or that he got $40,000 for the murals in the Interior Department. He only got $3,000 and had paid his expenses and those of an assistant all the way to Alaska for inspiration.

The artists, he said, are down from their ivory towers. "If I endorse those things called radical, it simply means I am trying to get at the roots of things." He favored all those organizations trying to do this—"trying to make a better America," he said.

Why He Joined League
"I joined the American League for Peace and Democracy because I was impressed by what they are doing."

Such organizations, he told the association, "are your allies in your work."

Of his design for the new Christmas seal, Kent said he had tried "to fill the bill." He tried to hang it on the spirit of the old German Christmas, one "associated with angels and children."

"I made it in the prettiest colors I knew—red, white and blue," he said. Earlier he went to the White House to give the President the first sheet of seals, in advance of the public sale December 1.

Springing from the speakers' table at the Y. W. C. A., he said informally he'd like to be called before the Dies committee. He was off then to the Adirondacks, "whose rocks and hills I love."

"Speaking of that, I live among them and I love those templed hills," he said.

The association, besides hearing Kent, heard Dr. W. A. Doppler, director of health education, National Tuberculosis Association, relate the progress made in treatment of the disease. Joseph L. McGroarty, director of rehabilitation, D. C. Tuberculosis Association, showed movies demonstrating how cures are affected. Dr. James G. Townsend, the association's head, presided.

Dr. A. B. Coulter was elected to the board of directors, along with Dr. Hugh S. Cummings, Dr. Townsend, Miss Gertrude Bowling, the Rev. H. B. Taylor and Dr. George C. Ruhland.

Army, Navy Stand By Guns On Forced Retirement System

By John G. Norris

Post Staff Writer

Despite the Army and Navy expansion programs, aggravating a marked shortage of officers in both services, neither the War Department nor Navy Department plans to relax its insistence on the forced elimination of qualified officers.

Secretary of War Woodring, aides said yesterday, will press Congress in January to enact his plan for the retirement of several thousand Army officers who are overage for their grade. He feels that the recent moves to strengthen the Army require more than ever that promotion "stagnation" be removed and younger officers be given positions of responsibility, it was said.

Naval officials said the department will continue to resist Congressional demands for a liberalization of the selection laws. Because of the expansion, fewer officers are expected to be retired forcibly next June than normally, but this will be done by holding passed-over officers in active service, rather than by changing the selection system, it was indicated.

Reservists to Be Called

Many Members of Congress and officers of both services had expected that the large increases in the enlisted ranks would bring withdrawal or delay of the Army elimination bill and weaken Navy Department resistance to a pending Navy personnel measure liberalizing existing law.

To replace officers forcibly retired both services plan to call more young reservists for short periods of active duty. The Army will ask Congress to call 1,300 reserve lieutenants to active service with combat units in addition to the 1,000 now allowed with the ground arms and the more than 2,000 aviation reservists.

The Navy would like to give all naval R. O. T. C. graduates a year or two with the fleet after graduation from college. It is now calling young reservists and a number of retired officers to active duty.

Many Congressional leaders say they cannot understand why the services should want to retire experienced officers when a shortage exists, and replace them with green reserves. In explanation, Army and Navy officials state that the shortage only exists in the lower ranks and that there is an oversupply of high-ranking officers.

Promotion By Seniority

The Army now promotes officers by seniority, with elimination only for proven inefficiency or by death or retirement at the age of 64. Under Secretary Woodring's plan, age limits would be fixed for each rank, and officers reaching the set ages—ranging from 50 to 62—would be retired regardless of efficiency and physical fitness.

In the Navy, promotion from one grade to another is determined by selection boards. These boards review the records of the officers due for advancement and divide them in three groups—those considered "best fitted" for promotion, those "fitted" for promotion, and the remainder, if any, not qualified for advancement.

The first group is promoted in the regular course, a certain number of second are promoted but not normally given sea commands, and the remainder retired in the higher rank. Those found not fit for promotion are discharged, or if they have long service, retired with a pension.

Britain Gives U. S. History's Biggest Scrap-Iron Order

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Nov. 20.—In the largest single transaction of its kind in history, Great Britain today completed negotiations here for the purchase of more than 750,000 tons of scrap iron, an amount equal to about 25 per cent of total 1938 United States exports of scrap.

The sale abroad of so large a quantity of one of the two basic raw materials for the production of steel in open-hearth furnaces, which make 90 per cent of all steel, is viewed as being especially significant since the United States steel industry is scheduled to produce more steel this week than in any other period in history.

Operating at 93.9 per cent of capacity, the Nation's open-hearth and Bessemer furnaces will pour 1,282,111 tons of steel ingots this week, 58,827 more than in the highest 1929 week.

Danish Crew Quits Sister Vessel of Wrecked Tanker

Copyright by New York Times

Bayonne, N. J., Nov. 20.—The Danish crew of the Standard Oil tanker Standard, which was lying alongside the J. A. Mowinkel yesterday when a blast occurred in one of the latter's tanks, quit their ship two hours later, it was learned today, and appealed to the Danish consulate in New York for passage home.

Their ship was to have sailed at 2 p. m. yesterday. She was still in port last night.

According to the consul, the men told him they feared sabotage aboard their own ship and trouble with American seamen, whose places they had taken.

The crew, six officers and 18 men, was one of three recently recruited aboard to man tankers of the Panama Transport Corporation, a Standard Oil subsidiary, in trade through belligerent zones.

Trade Board To Combat Auto Deaths

Backs Broad Safety Program to Save Lives in District

traffic ticket fixed," he declared. "No great progress can be made in the campaign to reduce accidents unless traffic laws are strictly and impartially enforced."

29,000 Lives Saved.

Hoffman launched a survey of the national safety campaign with an appeal to the board members for "participation in a war now being waged throughout the United States—a war on highway deaths." He pointed out that when the automobile manufacturers first actively supported the safety drive in 1935 the death rate for the Nation was 17.4 for every 100,000,000 vehicles—the country traveled. The present rate, he said, is 10.9, representing a saving of 29,000 lives, a reduction by 1,000,000 of the total of personal injuries and $1,000,000,000 cash saving in property damage.

He attributed the trend toward elimination of "sudden death" from streets and highways to the efforts of traffic officials backed by civic organizations, the development of scientific enforcement techniques through research at Northwestern University and the evolution of new engineering principles in road building.

Reduction of accidents is a challenge to the initiative of local governments, he said, inasmuch as most—if not all—the necessary scientific techniques have been developed.

He said that with adequate application of these techniques the national automobile death rate can be brought down to 6 deaths per 100,000,000 vehicle miles with existing highway facilities. With construction of a national system of "super highways" from which virtually every possibility of accident has been removed, the national rate could be lowered to 3 deaths, he said.

He placed at 25,000 the number of needed miles of "accident proof" roads ultimately carrying 80 per cent of the national automobile travel which, he said, has been discovered to be 91 per cent of American passenger transportation.

Howat told the board his committee was developing a program that would reach "every child in the District." Details were not revealed, but it was learned the child safety subcommittee decided yesterday to propose at subsequent meeting of the board inclusion of safety instruction in the school curriculum.

The proposal, Howat said, was that the Board of Education be asked to add a half hour traffic instruction each week to regular school courses.

Court Sustains Labor Board

The C. I. O. United Automobile Workers yesterday won the right to represent workers on the $1,000,000 annual pay roll of the Serrick Corporation at Muncie, Ind., by a 2-to-1 decision of the District Court of Appeals. The company manufactures automobile and refrigerator parts and stenotype machines.

A bitter struggle to organize the plant was reviewed in the decision, which asserted new doctrines of administrative law. The court stressed the freedom of administrative agencies from technical rules of evidence.

The National Labor Relations Board had branded two A. F. L. machinists' locals as "company unions" because six "straw bosses" were their most ardent organizers. Upholding the NLRB were Justices Rutledge and Miller, who declared that as a matter of law an employer is responsible for the labor activities of "supervisory" employees, even though they have no power to hire and fire. Chief Justice Grouer dissented.

Rutledge Reviews Field.

The NLRB found the company guilty of unfair labor practices, voided its closed shop contract with the A. F. of L. and ordered the company to recognize the C. I. O. union, which the board found to have enrolled a majority of the employees.

The company complied, but the two A. F. of L. unions appealed to the District Court of Appeals, being represented by Attorney Joseph A. Padway and Herbert S. Thatcher. Charles Fahy, NLRB general counsel, and Attorneys Robert B. Waits and Laurence A. Knapp, defended the NLRB order.

Justice Rutledge, in the 20-page majority opinion, explored the growing field of administrative law which governs labor disputes. He pointed out that the law of evidence before administrative agencies is not the same as it is in the courts, which follow Anglo-American common law rules.

"In the decision of questions of fact," said Justice Rutledge, "the board's findings are made conclusive, if supported by evidence, which must be substantial. But it is only convincing, not lawyers' evidence which is required. The board is not limited to rules of evidence prevailing in courts of law or equity."

"The evidence must be such as a reasonable mind would accept, though other like minds would not do so. The statutory mandate dispensing with judicial technicalities in procedure binds the reviewing court to the same extent as it does the board. The review is of administrative action taken by direction of Congress according to administrative, not judicial procedure."

Chief Justice Grouer agreed on this point. He disagreed, however, with the view that "straw bosses," with supervisory authority, but lacking the power to hire and fire, were to be regarded as employer representatives in union activity.

Board of Trade Pledges Safety First

A program for reduction of traffic deaths was laid before the Washington Board of Trade meeting last night in the Willard Hotel. Lawrence E. Williams, president, with Maj. Ernest W. Brown (center), chief of police, and Paul G. Hoffman (right), chairman of the Automotive Safety Foundation, shown at the gathering, attended by 500 members.

Garment Union Asks Labor Peace

1938, but unlike the others has never been expelled from the federation. "It quit the C. I. O. when that organization decided to establish itself on a permanent, constitutional basis."

The union convention at which the A. F. L.-C. I. O. question will be threshed out will be held in New York, beginning May 27. It will be the first time in 40 years the union has met there although the bulk of its membership is in the metropolitan area.

Change in A. F. L. Noted.

The I. L. G. W. U. resolution said: "We still are firmly of the opinion that the fundamental obstacles which stood in the way of a united labor movement when the C. I. O. was organized, namely, the reorganization of industrial unionism for the mass production industries and a greater measure of democracy in union government, have largely disappeared with the substantial change of the position of the A. F. L. on these issues."

The prospects of an early peace in the labor movement, unfortunately, are not bright at this hour. We regret that the several efforts of President Roosevelt in this direction have met with little success, though we are glad to know that the President has retained an abiding and sincere interest in the cause of labor peace.

Canada Looks Little Like a Nation at War

Much of Preparation For Hostilities Is Kept Well Hidden

By Devon Francis
By the Associated Press

Montreal, Nov. 20.—Bordering the United States is a nation at war, facing one of the biggest jobs it has ever attempted, and yet the physical evidences of the state of war existing between the Dominion of Canada and Germany are so meager that a visitor is surprised to encounter soldiers.

Much of the preparation for war of course, is hidden. Volunteer troops are in training, but information on their numbers or disposition must be kept from the enemy.

Young men are learning to pilot combat planes, but the character and extent of their instruction must remain secret.

Canada does not fear invasion or bombing raids. No one so much as suggests that the locks of the little canal which courses through the heart of Ottawa, capital of the dominion, are in danger from enemy bombs.

Seek to Reassure U. S. But Canada does fear saboteurs—and Canada, winter vacationland, is worried lest the United States look too much on the Dominion as a nation at war.

In both Ottawa and Montreal residents will tell a visitor, "On a few safeguards, yes, against sabotage, but Europe is a long way off and it would be sad if our being at war prevented citizens of the United States from coming up, just as they do in peace time."

Air service into, and within, Canada, like train service, ignores the state of war. Trans-Canada, air lines, government-subsidized, shuttles back and forth between the Pacific Coast and Montreal, eastern terminus, on regular schedules. Canadian colonial airways, with some planes of Canadian registry, wings between Montreal and New York several times a day.

A few soldiers patrol St. Hubert Airport at Montreal, coated against the late fall's 10 degree temperatures at night.

"I say," remarked a genial customs official with a touch of wistfulness as I validated my ticket for the return trip to New York by plane, "were you well treated here? I mean the war—we didn't give you much trouble, now did we?"

I agreed. "Then perhaps," he said, "you will say so when you get back to New York. The United States should know that."

It is war but it is not war. I tried to grab a taxi driver into a conversation about the war. "Oh, the war," he exclaimed, recognizing it. I've been reading about it. Will you be in Ottawa for the rugby game Saturday?"

Some Censorship Imposed

The war came home to the province of Quebec last month, almost by accident. Maurice Duplessis, the premier, carried the question of whether Canada should "participate" in the war to the electorate, predominantly French. A minor cabinet crisis developed in Ottawa during the fight.

Jealous of their French traditions and their autonomy, the Frenchmen of the province nevertheless turned Duplessis out on the issue. The victor was Adolphe Godbout, a liberal. Ernest Lapointe offered to resign his post as minister of justice if Duplessis was returned. Two other French cabinet ministers sided with him.

Here and there, of course, there are evidences of a state of war. A truckful of soldiers' coat collars turned up against the November chill, speeds through a Montreal street. Censorship—far from rigid—is imposed on news reports.

"Bring the story over—do you mind, old chap?" asked a man at the censor's office in Ottawa when I telephoned to inquire about the regulations.

At a club in Montreal a man in his forties musingly poured water into two fingers of Scotch.

"I suppose my two boys will enlist," he conceded. "This is war, again. But I am not lying awake nights thinking about it."

The Siegfried Follies of 1939 Set to Tune of American Song

South of the Border, Down Mexico Way, Replaces Tipperary for Tommy Atkins, Who Make Merry With Show Behind Lines

By Harold Denny
Copyright by the New York Times

With British Forces in France, Nov. 20.—The British troops of today are keeping cheerful, not with songs of their own homeland, as did their fathers in 1914, but with a sentimental ballad hammered out in New York's Tin Pan Alley. It begins, "South of the Border, Down Mexico Way."

Why this song has become the army's favorite no one knows. It has nothing to do with England, France or war; it has none of the nostalgic appeal of "Tipperary," to which the British soldiers of the last war marched down muddy roads; it cannot even be marched to, but this American song caught on somehow, and it is this that they sing in their billets or in cafes where they gather after hours for a spot of beer.

All up and down the line one hears it and last night at an amateur show given in a sizable town just behind the front line, it was this that the soldiers roared most lustily.

Britons Urged To Save, Help Pay for War

Economist Suggests Thrift Loans to State As Bar to Inflation

Copyright by the New York Times

London, Nov. 20.—Forecasting wartime economic dislocation in underproduction of consumer goods, overemployment and overconsumption, John Maynard Keynes, noted British economist, advocates a system of compulsory savings as means of raising an estimated total of £400,000,000 as loan money for financing the war. His proposal is set forth in two articles in the Times of London, the second of which is to be published tomorrow.

The plan, which might be described as a system of deferred payments, would apply to all classes of people. Keynes' object is to insure that increased earnings would be withheld from expenditure on consumption until the country's productive resources are free to cope with the increased demand.

His proposal is that every one earning an income above a suggested minimum of £150 annually should contribute a proportion of it on a graduated scale. This contribution would be divided into two parts, one to be an income-tax payment and the other a savings deposit, or, in other words, a loan to the state, bearing low interest at the rate of 2½ per cent.

In the case of small incomes the whole contribution would be regarded as a deposit and remain the taxpayer's property, although he would be unable to dispose of it until after the war, except for such unavoidable circumstances as illness and unemployment. On incomes above the lowest level, a proportion rising with income would be taken as income tax and surtax.

On the scale proposed, Keynes estimated that his proposal would result in raising £400,000,000 as loan money in addition to the income tax and surtax.

Keynes also advances the suggestion that men serving in the war forces might be credited with additional pay. In this connection it is recalled that there were many complaints in the last war that soldiers and sailors received poorer pay than if they had remained at home and worked in munitions or other factories. A similar complaint already has arisen in this war.

The Times points out editorially that the Keynes plan offers effective safeguards against the danger of inflation and contends it would be a real contribution to social as well as economic stability if a majority of wage earners were holders of government stock at the end of the war.

Steel Zone Now Europe's Busy Corner

French Are Stronger Than in 1914, When Germany Held Area

By Ralph Heinzen,
United Press Staff Correspondent

With French armies in the field, Nov. 20.—The busiest corner in Europe is the tight spot where Luxembourg lies in a wide no-man's-land between the French and German armies. In this small region more than half of Europe's steel is made, hence it is the chief source for munitions, guns and tanks.

On both sides and in between the lines smoke pours from factory stacks as steel mills of Luxembourg, Lorraine and the Ruhr all work day and night, despite the presence of massed rival armies. Wading through deep red mud in downpours of November rain, day after day, I have just completed a tour of the French-Luxembourg border on an inspection of French frontier defenses. Nowhere did I see a single Luxembourg defense position or soldier across the frontier nor were there any indications the citizens of the tiny duchy would try and defend themselves if German armies repeat the 1914 invasion.

But everywhere I saw the most intense industrial activity on both sides of the frontier, where iron and steel production has been kept up to the absolute maximum. The largest of the Luxembourg mills are within rifle shot of French frontier fortifications, just outside the steel town of Esch in the Alzette Valley.

On the French side of the border lies the famous Briey iron basin and the Longwy steel zone where Lorraine ore and Belgian coal produce 30 per cent of France's steel. At the start of the World War in 1914, more than half of the Briey mines lay inside the German frontiers. In the first days of the war German armies swept into the rest of the Briey basin and for the duration of the war France was deprived of her chief source of iron and its chief steel mills. When the German armies came through Belgium and invaded the Lens coal region, France lost most of her coal. Thus the Germans held for the duration of the World War 70 per cent of France's steel-making potential.

This time the situation is different. The Briey mines lie in a great circle well behind the Maginot Line whose fortresses form what is believed to be an impregnable line between the basin and the Belgian, Luxembourg and German frontiers.

The Briey mines and the Longwy steel mills can be heavily attacked from the air. But so can the German iron and steel centers in the Ruhr and Saar valleys.

A Hundred Types of Ships on Ceaseless Patrol Carry on British Sea Traditions

Portsmouth Base Seethes With Activity Of Nation at War

Wireless—Copyright, 1939, New York Times

Portsmouth, England, Nov. 20.—The symbol of Britain's great naval history, the Victory, which was Admiral Nelson's flagship at Trafalgar more than a century ago, rests in a drydock here, her topmasts housed, her yards and rigging down and the great admiral's furniture stored beyond the reach of Nazi air raiders. Two brass plates on the deck show where Admiral Nelson fell and died. So much for the past.

Across the docks with their steel cranes and hoisting devices sharply outlined against the autumn sky are some of the ships in which the nation, which lives by sea power, places its hopes of victory in this war. Around these ships for miles bolts and seethes the activity of a nation girding its strength at sea.

A Hundred Types of Ships Tonight, as every other night, a hundred different types of vessels—gate vessels that open and close the channel through protective booms, submarines, trawlers, detached squadrons seeking German raiders, cruisers and mine sweepers—carry on their ceaseless patrol. While each has a part, the existence of all is based on the great gray walls of the grand fleet somewhere north, and all of them together make up the mysterious thing that men call sea power, a little slice of which was shown to visiting correspondents.

A trim young lieutenant met the party at the station, which is built over the harbor, with the remark that the entire establishment was "steaming full speed ahead." The first stop on the tour was the training barracks, almost bulging with men and boys, some of them new recruits and some of them reservists and pensioners recalled for a brief polish before again returning to sea. The next visit was to the dockyard itself, where vessels were seen in all stages of construction and repair. Then lunch at the barracker mess, where the sleeve stripes of the reserve and volunteer reserve officers seemed as numerous as the straight stripes of the regulars.

Men Learn to Use "Lungs"

Then a speedboat took the party across the harbor to the submarine station. Men were seen in a deep tank learning to use the Davis escape apparatus, an arrangement of straps and an oxygen tank which is supposed to enable men to get out of a sunken submarine. But perhaps the most interesting of all was a submarine fresh from the North Sea. The crew was busy refitting her. Her tubes were loaded, and greasy spare torpedoes, their warheads in place, were slung above a table where the men were having tea.

From the submarine base the party went to the "Vernon Shore station," which is the headquarters for mines and torpedoes. Already every type of German mine had been dissected and analyzed.

The next stop was the royal marine barracks, where on one square the drilling of men who had enlisted yesterday could be compared with that of men with five weeks' experience.

Early next morning the party saw the gunnery school. The feature of this visit was a reproduction of night action. In order to allow young officers to learn how to keep calm and give their orders, the bridge of a battleship is reproduced and the tremendous roar and flash of a 16-inch salvo is reproduced by an explosion, which shook the whole room.

Sub Attack Simulated

After a quick trip down the mile-long line of sheds where gun crews were hard at work loading or stripping every type of gun, the group boarded one of the most modern vessels of the British navy—a small tremendously speedy motor boat with two torpedo tubes slung on the port and starboard. At slow speed she cruised out of the harbor and the gate vessels opened the nets for her to pass through. Once in the open sea the throbbles were opened and the torpedo boat simulated an attack on a battleship roaring full out at such speed that the only way to catch her would have been with planes.

Far out in the channel, a destroyer, temporarily detached from a patrol for training duties, was waiting. Soon after the party transferred and she carried out a practice attack with depth charges on an imaginary submarine. She was racing ahead at 25 knots when the captain on the open windswept bridge ordered firing to start. Two charges rolled over from the stern and a moment later there was a sharp explosion and two more hurled up and 40 feet out from each side. A deep explosion followed, and great fountains went to the sky. The destroyer reeled and the entire surface of the sea for yards around seemed to quiver with the force of the explosion.

Later the gun crew put in ten rounds at rapid fire, and then the destroyer turned back to port. As the party sat comfortably at tea it was hard to realize that somewhere in the depths of the ship men were at a secret listening device which tells when an enemy submarine is near.

By the Associated Press
Los Angeles, Nov. 20.—The divorce hearing of Rodney and Beatrice Pantages ended today on a note indicating a prospective behind-the-scenes battle over a property settlement.

Superior Judge William S. Baird took the counter divorce suits and the fight for custody of the two Pantages' children under submission after the sixth day of the trial introduced into testimony the name of a young film actor, Richard Greene.

Judge Baird indicated he would announce a decision on the divorce issue Monday, when he also will settle the question of community property, which was left in the hands of the opposing attorneys.

Pantages' lawyer made an unofficial estimate of the couple's community funds at $20,000, but Mrs. Pantages' attorney insisted the figure should be $100,000, "or perhaps more."

A witness for Pantages, Mrs. Louise Thomas, had testified that Mrs. Pantages told her at Palm Springs, a desert resort, she had been "out until 5 o'clock the night before with Richard Greene, the actor, and was very tired and had a hangover."

Today Mrs. Pantages said: "I never went out with Richard Greene."

Contesting her husband's charges of infidelity, Mrs. Pantages testified further that Pantages came home once with lipstick on his face and collar and explained, "I've just been kissing my mother," adding that "if you're getting suspicious we'll call it quits right now."

Last week a private detective testified he and Pantages broke into Mrs. Pantages' bedroom May 1 to find her in bed and bartender Pete Bedwell, of Palm Springs, putting on his clothing.

Asserting of Bedwell, "Why, I never even danced with him," Mrs. Pantages said she had gone to bed, but permitted the bartender to use her bathroom in which to "wash up before going out with another couple who had been present earlier in the evening."

total to $7,451 pledges for $631,888, or 82.60 per cent of the goal. Advance gifts unit next with 80.20 per cent of quota, reporting for the day 23 pledges for $48,600, or a total to date of 457 pledges for $417,843.

A quota of 74.7 per cent was attained by Metropolitan Unit with the day's reports of 1,054 pledges for $14,806; altogether, 88,380 pledges for $150,316. Group Unit (business firms) reached 84.20 per cent of quota with 5,730 new pledges for $35,521, bringing the total to 30,186 pledges for $290,824.

Suburban Unit Low
Suburban Unit marked up 46.86 per cent of quota, 222 new pledges for $7,163, totaling 2,583 pledges for $24,262. Capital Unit (clubs) at 60.20 per cent of quota with day's reports of 279 pledges for $888, for a total of 750 pledges and $3,589.

"Community Chest agencies are charged with a major responsibility," Lawrence E. Williams, president of the Washington Board of Trade, said in addressing the 800 volunteers at yesterday's report meeting. "We must care for human needs. We must aid those who are broken in spirit or health. Common sense dictates it."

Williams pointed out that despite the fact that the city has grown rapidly in recent years, there has been no commensurate increase in the amount requested for support of the work of Chest agencies.

Bondsmen Given An Extra Day to Produce Clients

Bondsmen, who are responsible to the courts for appearance of their customers, have been granted an extra day to produce indicted persons for arraignment.

District Attorney Pine announced yesterday that from now on the grand jury will report indictments on Tuesdays instead of Wednesdays, as has been the practice. Those indicted are required to be in court for arraignment the following Friday.

Pine said the change was not requested by bondsmen but that he felt the additional time would allow greater efficiency in the criminal courts.

Drive Against Utilities Seen By Rep. May

Statement Assails
Lilienthal, Carmody
As Leftist Wreckers

By the Associated Press

Representative May (Democrat), of Kentucky, said in a statement last night that "leftist" Administration officials were preparing a new attack against private electric utilities.

Referring to an address by John M. Carmody, Federal works administrator, at the start of work yesterday on the Santee-Cooper project in South Carolina, May said: "Mr. Carmody's blast against private enterprise in the utility industry, coming on Monday after a strangely similar attack on the same industry by David E. Lilienthal, TVA power director, on Saturday, sounds like a renewal of the Socialist warfare on this industry."

Deception Charged
"Without doubt, it is the opening gun of a propaganda barrage to pave the way for the real attack—promotion of the proposed national power policy committee grid system."

In his address at Indianapolis, S. C., Carmody told his audience to be on guard against efforts to scuttle the $40,000,000 Santee-Cooper power and navigation project.

The fight, he said, would be "brought to you in every shape and form—in the name of the wild birds and the hardwood trees, in the name of conservation, States' rights and constitutional law. But be not deceived. The central purpose is to deprive South Carolina of cheap power."

May said that Carmody's "dedication to the cause of cheap power... omitted from the list of opponents of this fantastic power scheme the millions of American coal miners and other workers now dependent upon a dwindling and stranded coal and railroad industry for their bread."

Warm Springs Gets Ready To Welcome Friend Roosevelt

Georgia Neighbors Are Glad That He'll Be There Earlier to See Autumn Colors;
Paralysis Victims Look Forward to Visit

By the Associated Press

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 20.—Thanksgiving comes on a new date to this old town, but it brings an old friend and it will be observed in the same, old simple way.

Back in the days when this old friend—Franklin D. Roosevelt—was just another Easterner seeking health at the famed springs, there was no occasion to single him out at turkey time. Now he wishes no fanfare and Warm Springs is glad to honor this wish for privacy and quiet.

When the President announced he was moving Thanksgiving up to November 23 to stimulate Christmas trade, Gov. Rivers of Georgia was one of 25 State executives who followed his lead.

While folks around here were glad Rivers' action avoided the possibility of embarrassment, some were pleased for another reason. They were glad that the President's earlier arrival will give him a better chance to see the Georgia countryside arrayed in its autumnal colors before winter reduces the hillsides to comparative drabness.

A big bin generously filled with logs stands hard by a door to the "Little White House." While they crackle in the fireplace, there will be many "fireside chats" during the President's stay from this coming Wednesday until the next Tuesday.

But they'll be homey talks with friends and neighbors of many years' standing.

If there is any special excitement around here it's down at the foundation for infantile paralysis victims, where patients again will draw straws to see who sits beside the President at Thanksgiving dinner.

Of course there will be many official visitors to the "Little White House"—including the entire Georgia Congressional delegation—and much official business will be done. But it's not Warm Springs' fault if Neighbor Franklin's job is just too big to leave entirely at turkey time.

Silver Spring Man's Body Found in River

Lawrence O'Harrow
Discouraged by Loss
Of Leg, Wife Asserts

The body of Lawrence D. O'Harrow, 33, of Silver Spring, was found floating in Georgetown Channel at Highway Bridge yesterday and recovered by Harbor Police.

O'Harrow, who had been missing since November 1, was last seen by his wife. He told her he thought he could get a job with the Federal Housing Administration, and she drove him there. He entered the door and disappeared.

At the time police learned from his wife, Mrs. Gloria Doris O'Harrow, that he had attempted suicide on June 28 after losing his job. The had news came, she said, three weeks after the completion of a $15,000 home.

She told police that her husband rented a room in a downtown hotel instead of coming home, and slashed both wrists. Falling, he broke a leg artery. His life was saved, but physicians had to amputate his leg. Both hands remained partly paralyzed.

He was just learning to walk with an artificial limb when he disappeared with $1 in his pocket. His wife said he could not reconcile himself to the loss of his leg.

The body was first sighted by a Highway Bridge tender, who called police. At the morgue it was identified by a friend, Joseph Kahn, of 4707 Connecticut avenue.

Captain Hopes He'll Command Squalus Again

By the Associated Press

Lieut. Oliver F. Naquin, commander of the Squalus, made a confidential report to President Roosevelt yesterday on the sinking of the submarine.

Leaving the White House, he told reporters he hoped to command the Squalus again when it is returned to service. The ship now is being reconditioned.

Naquin said he would go shortly to San Diego and expected to report for duty in a submarine squadron there December 9.

Every man who was rescued from the Squalus after it sank off the Atlantic Coast either has returned to the submarine service or will do so shortly, he said.

"You don't believe in jinxes?" a reporter asked.

Ickes Demands Standard Oil Pay $6,000,000 Judgment Won as Outgrowth of Teapot Dome

By Alfred Friendly.

"Honest Harold" Ickes yesterday smote two branches of the Standard Oil empire, hip and thigh.

On the one hand he moved to recover from the Standard Oil Co. of California, "the most valuable square mile in the world," lost to the Government in the Harding Administration oil scandals.

On the other, he stage-managed a scorching judicial slogging to officials of a Standard Oil Co. of Indiana subsidiary for building a $5,000,000 pipe line over public lands without first securing permission from the Government.

Figured in Teapot Dome

In the first case, Ickes ordered the General Land Office to reclaim "Section 36" of the Elk Hills, Calif., oil fields, and more than $6,000,000 in damages, in accordance with a decision last week of the California Circuit Court of Appeals.

The area, a square mile described by department officials as still holding "unestimable millions" in oil reserves, figured prominently in the Teapot Dome-Elk Hills revelations of the middle 1920s. It was acquired by oil speculator Edward L. Doheny in his dealings with Albert B. Fall, Harding's Interior Secretary.

In the pipe line case, Ickes charged officials of the Utah Oil Refining Co., an Indiana Standard subsidiary, with helping themselves to a right of way on public lands.

The Utah concern recently completed 450 miles of pipe line from Fort Laramie, Wyo., to Salt Lake City, 142 miles of it on public lands, department officials explained. Failure to obtain permission from Ickes was described by company counsel, Clay Tallman, as an "oversight."

Tallman argued that he had not seen a copy of the regulations requiring a permit from the General Land Office. He said he had not known of a 1935 law amending an earlier act. The first legislation said "a right of way is hereby granted," while the later act amended it to read, "The Secretary of Interior may grant a right of way."

"You Were Blind," Says Ickes
Tallman said the company acted on the basis of the earlier law.

Rolling the words off his tongue with obvious relief, Ickes asserted, "Ignorantia legis neminem excusat" . . . You're arguing that when you see a stop light you don't have to stop because the sign wasn't there last year.

"Somebody was standing in front of the sign," began Tallman.

"No one was standing in front of it," Ickes snapped. "You were blind."

He concluded, however, that the trespass had been unintentional and indicated that an amicable solution could be reached.

In the Elk Hills case, the circuit court upheld a Federal court decision last year, which found that title to the famed Section 36 rested with the Government, and ordered the Standard Oil Co. of California to pay $6,214,102.42 in court claims and repayment for oil taken out, less its own extraction costs.

Fall's Ruling Reversed

The case had its background in legislation passed by Congress in 1853, granting sections 16 and 36 in every township of public lands in California to the State for use of the public schools. Subsequently, however, the courts construed the grant as not applying to lands of "known mineral value."

Section 36 of Kern County was bought by Doheny from the State, after a finding by Fall that the land was not of known mineral value.

The Standard Oil concern later acquired the land.

In 1935, Ickes ruled that the section was known to be of mineral character before it was bought by Doheny.

Following the Teapot Dome revelations, Senator Thomas Walsh (Democrat), of Montana, had legislation passed instructing the Secretary of the Interior to regain title to the land. Steps were not taken, however, until a few years ago.

The oil concern has not yet indicated whether it will appeal last week's decision to the Supreme Court.

To End Discrimination

Schooling for children excluded from regular classes because of venereal infection is no less important than instruction in homes or hospitals for youngsters confined by chronic illness or physical handicaps. The current report on schooling for children with social diseases, issued by a citizens' advisory committee to the Board of Education, serves chiefly to point out the magnitude of the need for educational work outside the classroom.

The Board of Education has long been aware of this problem. Yet it has been compelled to rely upon temporary grants of funds through the WPA. Now it is quite evident that even the temporary program is meeting only part of the need for education in the home. If the Board of Education prepares a comprehensive plan to overcome this discrimination against handicapped children, it will at least go to Congress with the enthusiastic endorsement of the community behind it.

In the case of children excluded from the schools because of venereal infection, mere instruction during the period of cure is only a partial remedy. The aim should be, of course, greatly to minimize or entirely eliminate disability resulting from plaques of this sort. The investigating committee found that "neglect both of health teaching and sex education in school and home, together with lack of wholesome recreation facilities," is responsible for many cases of infection among adolescents.

There is a serious challenge to the schools to adopt preventive measures as well as to plan for education of syphilis victims while they are excluded from the schools. That will not be an easy task. It will have to be worked out in full cooperation with parents or guardians. But the difficulties involved do not justify any evasion of the issue. If the Board of Education outlines a forward-looking plan, and if it acquaints the public with the urgent need for forthright action, funds will probably be found to put its proposed safeguards into effect.

Sign of Maturity

The election of a Constituent Assembly in Cuba last week was probably the freest and fairest ever held on the island during the 37 years of its independence.

There appears to be no evidence that the government sought by any improper means to influence the balloting. The voters were allowed to choose their representatives unhindered by governmental pressure. And the parties contending for mastery ranged all the way from the extreme Right to the extreme Left with many shades between.

Indeed, the election might almost be said to be a recapitulation of present and past political tendencies in Cuba. Participating in the electoral struggle were a variety of individuals who were at one time or another at the top but are now again struggling up the political ladder.

Thus Mario G. Menocal, Cuba's chief executive from 1913 to 1921, headed one of the opposition parties. Another party was headed by Ramon Grau San Martin, president of the republic for a few brief months in the period following the overthrow of the Machado dictatorship. Still another faction was led by Dr. Orestes Ferrara, secretary of state in the Machado regime. All of these men and others who figured in last week's balloting have once drunk the wine of power only later to eat the bread of exile.

The best proof that Cuba's election was not of the time-honored Latin-American variety but a real democratic plebiscite is that the opposition parties between them elected 41 delegates to the Assembly, with the government parties capturing only 35. This does not necessarily mean that the grip on the Cuban political machinery held by Col. Fulgencio Batista, army chief of staff and the power behind the throne, will now be relaxed. The opposition's majority is divided among several parties which, now that the election is over, may or may not be able to pool their strength. But it does mean that the frequently voiced accusation that Cuba is ruled by a disguised dictatorship is now subject to very considerable discount.

The Assembly which has just been elected will have as its principal task the formulation of a new constitution for Cuba. It remains to be seen whether it will be as free from governmental political pressure in the accomplishment of this objective as was the electorate which put it into power. But the fact that the electorate was allowed to express its will is an indication of Cuba's growing political maturity which augurs well for the island's future.

New Terror Of The Seas

In a recent broadcast Winston Churchill, Britain's first lord of the admiralty, spoke with satisfaction of the progress the Allies have made in overcoming the German submarine menace. Although the threat to the Allied blockade from that quarter is by no means over, he said, and many difficult days are still ahead, this menace, he insisted, is steadily becoming less serious.

Available figures of U-boat destructiveness since the present war began tend to bear him out. Allied and neutral shipping losses resulting from submarine warfare have steadily declined. The total tonnage lost from that cause during the past seven weeks is below that registered during the first month of hostilities. Now, however, a new menace to Allied shipping has arisen. Over the last week-end no fewer than nine British and neutral vessels, including the 8,000-ton Dutch liner, Simon Bolivar, have been sent to the bottom. These ships were not the victims of U-boats but of floating mines.

It is possible, of course, that the mines responsible for the loss of the nine ships were set adrift by heavy gales which blew westward over Germany, the Baltic and the North Sea. Should this prove to be the case, it would not in the least mitigate the terrible tragedy represented by the loss of 140 men, women and children when the Simon Bolivar went down and by the casualties on other vessels. But it would, at least, provide some assurance that blind and indiscriminate destructiveness has not yet become the order of the day in the naval war between Germany and the Allies.

It is not merely that floating mines are a type of weapon whose deliberate employment is barred under international law. The principal objection to them, and the reason why their use has been prohibited by common consent, is that floating mines are even less capable of making distinctions between combatants and non-combatants, between belligerents and neutrals, than are submarines which, at least, are subject to human guidance.

Since the Allies would be cutting their own throats by floating mines in their own shipping lanes, the finger of suspicion naturally points to Germany. There is, however, no conclusive evidence that the Third Reich is guilty of the crime of which she is accused by the British. And it is to be hoped that Germany will not deliberately resort to so evil a weapon.

Such action would be an acknowledgment of a state of desperation in the beleaguered Third Reich. And in the long run it would do Germany far more harm than good. Floating mines could undoubtedly do a lot of damage to British and neutral shipping before the menace from this source could be put under control. It is doubtful, however, whether they could do sufficient damage to end the Allied blockade and win the war for Germany. On the other hand, such a policy would very greatly antagonize the neutrals and thus bring about its own retribution.

Unfair Practices

Thurman Arnold has replied in a forthright and constructive manner to the inquiry of labor organizations as to what type of union activities will be prosecuted under the antitrust laws. His courageous statement of policy may be as effective as actual prosecutions in curbing illegal conduct on the part of some labor organizations.

As pointed out by the Assistant Attorney General, there is nothing in the antitrust laws which detracts from the right of collective bargaining. But when labor organizations use their power merely to restrain legitimate trade they should be prosecuted as vigorously as are employers for similar conduct. Strikes and boycotts are justifiable so long as labor is fighting for fair wages, reasonable hours, protection of workers' health and safety and of the right to bargain collectively. Use of the same methods to prevent modernization of an industry, for example, are intolerable.

Mr. Arnold cites as an illustration of "unreasonable restraints" on the part of labor groups "the efforts to prevent the installation of factory-glazed windows or factory-painted kitchen cabinets." In other cases unions have attempted coercion to fix prices, to compel the hiring of unnecessary labor and to destroy legitimate systems of collective bargaining. Without mincing words, the Department of Justice has declared its intention of ending these illegal practices through antitrust law prosecutions.

Progressive labor groups are not likely to challenge this policy. On the contrary, it should have their hearty cooperation, for it is designed to strengthen legitimate collective bargaining. If Mr. Arnold can outlaw jurisdictional strikes, he will be entitled to a place on labor's roll of honor. There are few, if any, greater perils confronting organized labor than the persistent stoppage of work because of inter-union controversies.

By taking a positive stand against these abuses, and against rackets operating under the guise of organized labor, the Administration has notably clarified its own position. Until recently its interest seemed to be confined to the maintenance of labor's right to bargain collectively. Perhaps that attitude was justified by the lag in organization of labor in the large mass-production industries. With collective bargaining more firmly entrenched, however, the Administration acquired an unmistakable responsibility to curb illegal use of this enlarged power.

In effect, the Department of Justice has now informed organized labor that it has taken upon itself obligations as well as privileges—that its augmented power must be used only for legitimate ends. Whenever labor fails to apply such essential restraints to its own conduct it must necessarily stand before the law in the same position as the employer who resorts to unfair commercial practices.

Third-Term Joke

President Roosevelt is doing his best to make a joke out of the uncertainty concerning his intentions in 1940. By dropping what he believes to be conflicting hints the President seems to think he is leading the newspaper correspondents a merry chase. And that gives him exuberant delight.

In laying the cornerstone of the Jefferson Memorial a few days ago, the President expressed the hope that he would be able to attend the dedication of the memorial in January, 1941. That statement was intended to suggest to unthinking men of the press that the President intends to run for a third term. With an outburst of merriment, Mr. Roosevelt later admitted that he had deliberately laid this trap for newspapermen. "The effect," he said, "was terrific—as funny as a crutch."

Since all newspapermen worth their salt know that Mr. Roosevelt's second term extends into January, 1941, they found little humor in the incident. Nevertheless, the President persisted in his effort to be elusive and amusing. In laying the cornerstone of the library at Hyde Park, which is to house his manuscripts, letters, books, pictures and models, he tried to reverse the impression which he had previously attempted to create.

Of course, the President's remark that he hoped these confidential papers would be ready for public inspection in 1941 was meaningless so far as his attitude toward a third term is concerned. But it seems to have given him a great deal of pleasure to think that he was misleading the press.

No one will begrudge the President any enjoyment he can obtain from these transparent efforts to be elusive. It is not without significance, however, that Mr. Roosevelt seems to be the only one who has appreciated his joke. The press has simply explained his verbal stratagem in matter-of-fact terms, and there is no indication that the public is straining its ears at every word from the Chief Executive to justify speculation as to what his political ambitions may be.

The important fact is that, while the President is trying to be coy, Presidential candidates within the Democratic Party are quietly strengthening their positions, and many observers are beginning to take it for granted that Mr. Roosevelt will not attempt to break the two-term tradition. Should the President later upset this growing assumption, his little joke will certainly not be at the expense of the press.

1,000 Per Cent

Presumably the Secretary of War was not trying to be ridiculous when he declared, last week-end, that the United States must have an army which is "1,000 per cent perfect." But in using this expression Mr. Woodring nonetheless achieved the distinction of talking utter nonsense.

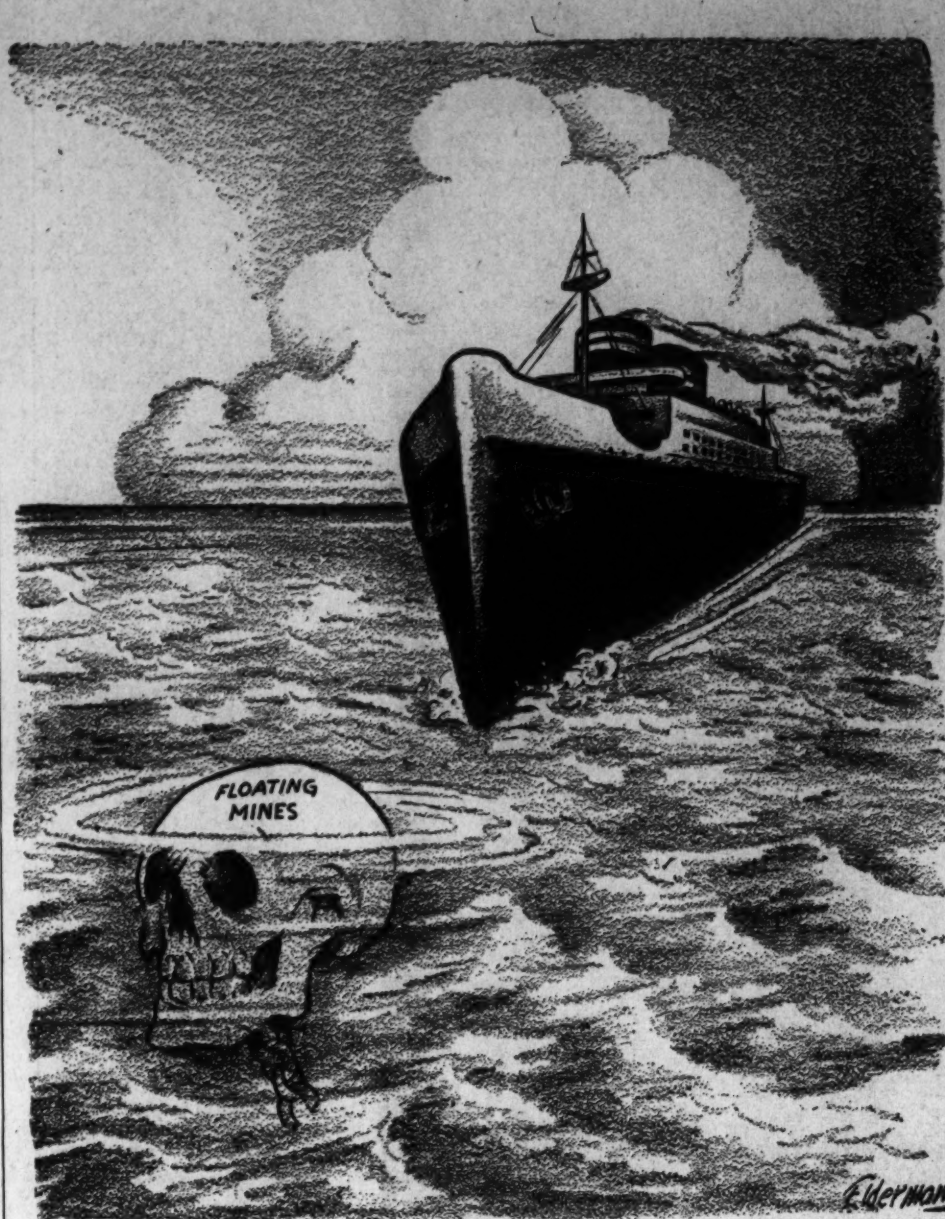

Percentage, as the word itself should convey to anybody of grade-school education, is necessarily expressed as a part, or all, of the number 100. For that reason it is not impressive, but merely silly, to speak of a percentage over that figure, except when a rate of increase is described. Mr. Woodring might just as rationally suggest that, to promote discipline, our soldiers should be drilled 70 days a week.

Expression of percentage in per mille terminology has wormed its tortuous way into the language through the tabulation of baseball statistics. It has become conventional for enthusiastic fans to observe that Joe DiMaggio, for instance, is batting over 300 per cent. But what is meant, and what careful sports commentators always write, is that so-and-so is batting over .300. There is no reason why people in high official position should not be equally meticulous in their definitions.

Not even a 1,000 per cent increase in its appropriation, which may be what the Secretary of War has in the back of his mind, could make the Army "1,000 per cent perfect." So the country will feel quite happy about its security if Mr. Woodring will reduce his measurement of military perfection to a normal, and at least theoretically obtainable, 100 per cent.

"The number of millionaires in this country is decreasing," according to a statistician. When Uncle Sam made them divide, they ceased to multiply.

Letters To The Editor

Suggests Mediation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Yes, this is a "phony" war, a face-saving war; but one, nevertheless, that is being waged upon the brink of impending human slaughter that may be without parallel in the recorded annals of time, not to mention the blacking out of most that civilization has wrought.

We are neutral, yes, and fervently hope to stay so. But is this our full duty in the premise—to humanity?

Does any follower of the war of words now emanating from the high places; the hesitancy and delay of both belligerents to start a major attack; the attempted justification of action taken, doubt that a face-saving life-line for getting out of the mess without loss of prestige would not be more than welcomed by all belligerents? The known facts seem to so indicate.

Well, what is the life-line—intervention? Has not that been tried and rejected? Yes, after seemingly precipitate advance door-slaming by the British Lord of Admiralty to the humane and well intended proffer by a neutral King and Queen. But what of an offer of mediation at this time by the chief of the greatest neutral—the United States? Who believes that, in view of what we believe of this war, of the innermost thoughts of its leaders, the admitted doom awaiting all, that it would not be accepted?

Yes, but what would attempted mediation amount to? Are not the professed ideologies of the belligerents apparently irreconcilable? Perhaps so, maybe not. But let the condition precedent be the maintenance of the status quo—cease firing. Who, after that, with world opinion as it is, would assume responsibility of beginning the strife anew? What would be his standing with the soldier in the trenches, the gas-masked, rationed family in the dug-out back home? Isn't this worth trying.

New Thanksgiving Day Seen As Precedent

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The changing of our annual Thanksgiving Day from November 30 to November 23, by Executive proclamation, has created a dangerous situation. In fact this change is far more serious than appears on the surface, because of the tendency it reveals.

Here in America we celebrate three well established and highly cherished religious festivals: Thanksgiving, Christmas and Easter. Christmas and Easter are purely ecclesiastical festivals; that is, they are controlled largely by the Christian Church. On the other hand, Thanksgiving, which claims our attention at this time, is the only religious festival whereby the whole Nation is called upon to express its gratitude to Almighty God for his many blessings through the year. This festival is the one occasion on which the church and state come close together.

Thanksgiving was established as a religious custom by the Pilgrim Fathers in 1621, and forms the very foundation upon which our religious freedom stands. In 1863 President Lincoln issued a proclamation, recommending that the last Thursday in each November be observed as annual Thanksgiving Day. All succeeding Presidents until now have followed this regulation. Thus the day was set apart as a national, sacred religious festival; the prime purpose being for the whole people to worship God.

The changing of this date of Thanksgiving may appear of small significance at first glance. But when we recall that President Roosevelt stated that he changed the date to meet the request of businessmen, this situation reveals another side entirely. In other words, the purpose of Thanksgiving in this

For Truck Drivers

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I say a few words as to Mr. Jokes' animadversions against trucks?

About two years ago I drove alone in a small coupe from Washington to Lansing, Mich. A few miles before reaching Jackson I came to a place where two well built and well traveled roads were before me. It was getting dusky and my 60-year-old eyes could not discern directions, if there were any, and I took the road to the left, which looked to me to be the most traveled.

After some time I became doubtful of my course and drew up to the side of the road and getting out of the car tried to stop car after car to make inquiry, without success, though I could hardly believe they would pass a small woman of my age, all alone, with the evening growing dark. I couldn't have appeared intimidating.

I was about to get in my car and wander on, when a truck driver seeing me, descended from his seat and came over to inquire if he could be of service. He informed me that I was five miles off my route, and should have taken the other road back where the blinkers were.

When in Lansing I started to detail my experience and a gentleman remarked, "Were there no trucks passing?" and when I told him it was a truck driver who finally came along and put me on the right road, he merely commented, "I didn't think a truck driver would have passed you by." M. B. H.

Court And Congress

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mark Sullivan is always interesting for one reason or another. For instance his column of November 18 seeks to show that the New Deal Congress made the Supreme Court "the goat" by frequent willingness to pass measures whose constitutionality it doubted. Mr. Sullivan quotes testimony: "A justice who was on the Court some years ago, before the Roosevelt Administration, once said, in a private conversation: 'I am tired of Congress sending over here measures which they know to be unconstitutional.'"

Now a certain type of reader will miss the point that this testimony was dated "before the Roosevelt Administration" came into power. But the polls show Roosevelt's popularity still rising. MONITOR.

Court Appointment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just read the editorial of November 17 in which you say, commenting upon the death of Mr. Justice Butler and the opportunity thus given the President to appoint another judge to the Supreme Court, "Had he shown patience he would, in due course, have succeeded in doing in a normal, natural and entirely unobjectionable fashion what he actually sought to achieve through legislative legerdemain."

I take issue with that statement. No President has the right to pack the court with members known to be in sympathy with his own ideas of government, with a view to their perpetuation through court decisions. To admit such a right would mark a new low in our conceptions. Justices Stone and Cordozo, two of the three members of the original "liberal" bloc, were appointed, respectively, by Presidents Coolidge and Hoover, neither of whom has any standing with our liberals. A judge should have no bias except in favor of the law as it stands. It is not his duty to change it by construction or otherwise.

So anxious have the people been to keep the judiciary free from partisanship that elections of judges have often been set at a time different from that for the filling of other elective offices. Thus, in the Wisconsin district in which I formerly lived, a capable and honest judge was elected and repeatedly reelected although he was a Democrat and the district was strongly Republican. That was made possible by judicial election in April instead of November.

Another bad sign of the times is the frequent reference to geographical location or religion as having a bearing upon the qualifications of a possible appointee to the Supreme Court. C. V. BURNSIDE.

"Self-Chosen?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In view of the virtually unanimous public disapproval of the placing of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial on its present site where it disfigures the long cherished natural beauties of the Tidal Basin, and recalling the high-handed methods by which this unpopular project was jammed down the throats of the voiceless residents of the District despite their united and indignant protests, did it not seem somewhat ironical, in the dedication ceremonies yesterday to have President Roosevelt blandly state:

"We believe that the average opinion of mankind is in the long run superior to the dictates of the self-chosen." T. H. RUSSELL.

The Lonesome Elephant

"You are never content to leave well enough alone," Sidi Taib chided me, after I had attempted some improvements about the house and garden which had not come to a happy end. "You remind me of the Story of the Lonesome Elephant."

"And what is that?" I asked, for I could see that he was of a mind to tell me one of his tales.

"Suppose you tell Majouba to bring us in a fresh pot of tea, to keep my throat from getting dry, and I will tell you." After I had given the necessary directions, Sidi Taib began his story.

"In the name of Allah the All-Powerful, the All-Compassionate! Many, many years ago there lived a Sultan, who spent most of his time here in Fez, his favorite city. He lived in great magnificence, as befits a Sultan, and in order to live in this grandeur he laid heavy taxes upon the people of Fez. The merchants soon began to grumble among themselves at the burden laid upon them, and at last they resolved to protest to the Sultan. There was one among them more cunning than the rest, and he proposed a wily scheme to his fellows.

"We cannot come before the Sultan empty-handed," he told them. "We must gain his favor before we beg him to lighten our taxes."

"But what can we give him?" someone asked. "Surely the Sultan has all that the heart of man can desire, with his great palace and his gardens and his stables and his slaves and all his gold and jewels. There is nothing we can give him that he does not already have."

"There is one thing dearer to the Sultan than all else," declared the wily merchant, "and that is his menagerie. There he spends his happiest hours, so his wazir, who is one of my best friends, tells me. His only grief is that he does not have an elephant in his collection of wild beasts. Now I propose that we obtain an elephant and present it to our lord. Then he will be so pleased that he will gladly reduce our taxes."

"Everyone was delighted with the subtlety of this scheme, and the purchase of an elephant was quickly agreed upon. After many months and at a staggering expense, the merchants secured an elephant, with his trainer.

"On the appointed day the elephant was attired in the costliest of regalia, and the leading merchant, by Fez, headed by the elephant and his trainer, formed a procession to the Sultan's palace. They led the elephant at the gate and were ushered into the presence of the Sultan.

"The Sultan was greatly pleased and ordered that the elephant be led into the garden, that he might see it. When he returned to the audience chamber, his face expressing his pleasure, he asked, 'And now what can I do for you, who have pleased me so greatly with your gift?'

"The spokesman of the group, after much prodding from his fellows, at last came to the point and begged that their taxes might be lightened, since their poverty was expressed only by their devotion to their lord."

"The Sultan's expression changed to one of anger. 'What nonsense is this you talk?' he cried. 'You are rich enough to buy this costly elephant as a gift for me, and yet you protest you are too poor to pay your taxes, which amount to a miserable sum. Since you have shown me your wealth, I shall increase your taxes by a half. Now begone!'

"But the increased taxes are not the only burden the discomfited merchants had to bear. The Sultan became very fond of the elephant and ordered its trainer to let it roam at will throughout the city, lest it grow restless from being confined in the menagerie grounds. Now a plague of locusts could not have caused greater destruction than did this elephant."

"He took whatever he wanted from the markets, eating the finest of the food stuffs and trampling much of the remainder into the ground. Many a shop he would demolish a shop from sheer mischief, and none dared to raise a hand against him, since he belonged to the Sultan."

"At last the merchants could endure no longer to see their shops wrecked and their stores destroyed. They held a time of meeting, and there they blamed the would-be wily merchant. 'It is all your fault,' they upbraided him. 'It was you who conceived the idea of giving the Sultan an elephant. Now you must free us from this curse.'"

"After much bitter talking and fierce threats, the merchant at last agreed to head a delegation to protest to the Sultan. The next morning they assembled, full of their woes, and set out for the palace, with the wily merchant in the lead. Many a time they were met, first one and then another, merchant dropped from the procession."

One had a son who was grievously ill; another had a new wife; a third remembered that he had a pressing engagement; and still another dropped in at a bath purify himself before appearing in the presence of the Sultan. By the time they reached the gates of the palace, only the most embittered and courageous remained, but they were determined to see the matter through."

"They were shown into the presence of the Sultan. The wretched spokesman floundered about in expressions of devotion and humility till the Sultan's patience was at an end."

"Speak out," he ordered. 'What is it you want?'

"May it please Your Highness," began the spokesman, "Your Highness—elephant—"

"Yes, what about my elephant?" roared the Sultan, and his countenance was not pleasant to behold. "The wily merchant's knees shook beneath him. It has occurred to us," he stammered in his terror, "that the elephant might be lonely without a mate. Would Your Highness permit us to obtain a female elephant to bear him company in his solitude?"

"And, strange to say," chuckled Sidi Taib, "that merchant died in a mysterious manner two days after he had thus gained the Sultan's favor."

Digging Up The Truth

TOM PENDERGAST, the old Democratic boss of Kansas City, and Otto Higgins, his police director, are in Leavenworth Penitentiary, the machine is broke and demoralized, and the wide-open rotten city of two years ago is tightly policed and miserably pure. This change was brought about by several agencies of the Federal Government with the reluctant and very belated cooperation of the local courts, but credit for the original initiative and the spade work belongs to a group of reporters on the staff of the Kansas City Star.

Their persistent digging turned up the first real proof of the padding of registration rolls and, later in the fight, they checked every one of the 800 names on a list of county jurors who were to try members of the gang on State charges. This investigation proved that about half of the jurors were political ringers, whose livelihood depended on the vindication and preservation of the machine. The jury trial was so flagrant that the State supreme court set aside all verdicts by members of this panel.

New Registration Showed Big Gain

THE CANVASS of the registration roll began in the fall of 1938 when a new registration showed a tremendous increase in the voting power, which could not be explained. Roy Roberts, the Star's managing editor, realized that the assignment called for a long season of old-fashioned reporting, and was himself disturbed to discover that this was a disused and all but lost art. His men were not organized or trained for such work, being detailed on beats or runs and catch-as-catch-can assignments according to the modern method which avoids crusades.

Charles Graham began the investigation. His method was to select a dwelling house, hotel or apartment in a neighborhood where the organization was known to be strong, and quietly bracket the place by asking the neighbors on both sides, sometimes even children playing in the streets, who lived there. He would then refer to the registration list and visit the premises under suspicion. The householders, loyal to the precinct organization, usually insisted that the persons registered actually did reside there, but by quoting their replies faithfully in print and describing the quarters, Graham was able to convey the information that most of them were lying.

He soon had the assistance of Paul Miner on the canvass, and as the campaign widened, the staff on various phases increased to a dozen. Jack Williams, Reginald Tolley and Ernest Tucker back-stopped the assistants in the hall, the citadel of the Pendergast gang; Alvin McCoy, Robert Clark and William Curry cooperated in the same way at the courthouse and Dan Larimer at the Federal building where Maurice Milligan, the U. S. attorney, presently began an investigation under a conspiracy law passed in the day of the original Ku Klux Klan.

PAUL FISHER, a famous football player of a few years ago, and today a newspaper writer to warm the heart of an old-time city editor, did roundup stories, including one perfect description of the close, unremitting labor and loyalty of the precinct captain who is always the backbone of any efficient political organization. Working as a team, the Star men gave Kansas City a thorough understanding of the system, but, nevertheless, failed to arouse public indignation at the time.

Graham reported a case in which a number of voters registered at a garage where no living quarters were to be found, but were said to be highway freighters who lived in the cabs of their trucks. Of 16 voters registered at an undertaking place, 13 came to the front when their names were published and proved that they were registered legally elsewhere in their respective home precincts. Fifty were registered at a colored brothel where only the keeper and his wife actually resided. Graham verified 105 fake registrations out of 107 at one place, 48 out of 50 at another and 44 out of 53 at another, proving about 3,000 frauds, all told, in a few weeks.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Founding Of The European Union

AT THE END of last week the British and French reached an agreement by which they may have succeeded in laying the cornerstone of a new constitutional structure. If the fates are kind, it is a wisdom, courage, and faith among men, there may develop within this structure and around it a federal union of the free peoples of Europe. Nothing that has been done since the war began, it may be that nothing which has been done in our time, holds such a promise for the future.

Perhaps the promise will not be realized. Perhaps the peoples of the world have not yet learned enough wisdom from the dangers which threaten them, nor been purified enough as yet by their sufferings. But one thing at least may be said, that unlike the League, which was set up reluctantly as a concession to the other-worldly idealism of Woodrow Wilson, the union which the French and British are now creating is born of their own vital needs amidst the grim realities of the world they live in. They are making a union because they are lost if they do not and perhaps they will perpetuate and enlarge that union because in no other way can life be made tolerable for themselves and their children.

Common Currency And Common Budget

THUS, it would appear that the two governments are in effect pooling their purchasing power in regard to all that they need to buy outside their two empires. In their transactions with the rest of the world they will have in effect a common currency and a common budget of appropriations for their respective imports. Within their own territory, and within that larger area which embraces the British commonwealth, the dependent empire, and the French empire, they will practice a division of labor so as to obtain "the best use in common interests of the resources of both countries in raw materials, means of production, tonnage," and as the statement adds significantly "etc." This will have to mean in practice a decided movement towards Franco-British free trade and away from restrictionism and nationalistic self-sufficiency.

They are also pooling their merchant ships. And since there are no merchant ships operating in European waters except their ships, and ships that are subject to their control, they are in effect creating something not unlike a European interstate commerce commission. The larger part of the foreign trade of Western Europe with the rest of the world, and a very considerable part of the intra-European trade that goes by sea, will be under the jurisdiction of the Allied Union.

No doubt there will be many practical difficulties in administering this unified control, and in all likelihood it will encounter some open and a great deal more concealed, opposition from vested interests and particularistic opinion in both countries. From our own experience of union we know what sectionalism can do and how stubborn is the opposition of local and special interests.

Nevertheless, the scheme as a whole is bold and comprehensive. For the two Governments are entrusting to a joint central authority most of the functions which are necessary and elementary in any federal union—namely, a common defense, a common foreign policy, a common currency, a common budget for many of their expenditures, a common transportation system, the reduction of internal barriers to the exchange of goods and the division of labor, and some measure of common policy in the conservation and development of natural resources. Has any union we know of had many more federal functions when it was first established?

THE GREAT QUESTION, of course, is whether the Franco-British union can grow and can perpetuate itself. Experience alone will, of course, answer the question. But this much I venture to believe, that if an enduring European union can be founded in this generation, the conditions are more favorable at this moment than they have ever been before or are likely ever again in our time to be. For there is now an altogether unusual conjuncture of circumstances which present a unique opportunity to the peoples and the statesmen of Europe.

There is the war itself. If we think clearly and speak plainly, we must say that in time of peace when politics are normal and agitation is free, it would be inordinately difficult, probably impossible, to persuade nations to surrender an important part of their sovereign power to a supra-national authority. That was demonstrated at Paris when the League of Nations was established. Yet no federal union can be made except by the surrender of many of the powers of national sovereignty.

Now in the war conditions of Europe today, the governments have virtually unlimited power, and whatever they do which is necessary to the conduct of the war will have the support of public opinion. They are therefore able to set up a national authority and to endow it with functions which, if the project had to be debated in peacetime, would arouse interminable agitation and finally be lost or compromised into failure. By creating a union now and letting it become established, by letting it acquire the prestige of victory in the war, by demonstrating its utility, the chances are greatly improved that the peace-time parliaments will not wish or dare to destroy what has been constructed.

Plan Necessitates German Revolution

A GERMANY purged of Hitlerism would then be a Germany with the same principles of law and order which prevail in free countries. Thus Belgium, the Netherlands, and the Scandinavian countries could without any revolutionary change enter a European union. But Germany could not. And the indispensable condition of German membership in the union, therefore, is a revolutionary overthrow of the Nazi regime and the return to a regime, monarchist, democratic, or anything else that the Germans prefer, which is legally and humanly similar to that of its civilized and free neighbors. And until the Germans return to such a regime, they will be outside the union and at war with it.

The establishment of this union makes possible a wholly different peace settlement than that at Versailles. For if the object of the war is to fight Germany until the Germans qualify themselves for membership in a European union, then there will be no great problem of frontiers and national minorities at the peace conference. Inside a union the location of frontiers is not a matter of life and death. In a federal Europe the idiotic notion will wither away and die that all the peoples of the same language, or all of the people who imagine themselves to be of the same racial stock, must or can be separately corralled inside of castiron political compartments. They are not in Switzerland. They are not in Belgium. They are not in the United States of America. They were not in the Europe that was Christendom. And they will not be in Europe if it is to remain civilized.

In this union there is the means for solving the colonial problem. For in any enduring settlement the dependent colonial empires of Great Britain, France, Italy, Portugal, Belgium, and the Netherlands must of necessity be regarded as a common European trust, and the development of the colonies opened up to all the European peoples through corporations of some sort in which all may own shares and participate in the management.

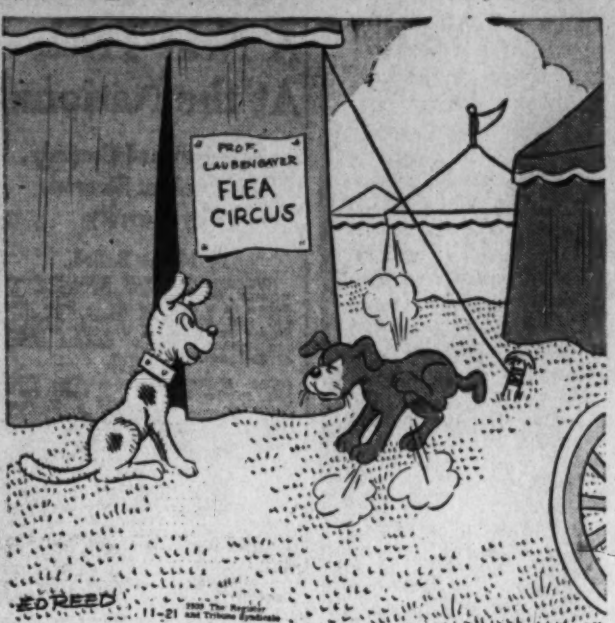

Union Can Solve Debt Problems

IN THIS UNION too there is the means for dealing with the difficult problems of demobilization and of the reconstruction of a post-war economy. For the return to peace will have to be controlled as carefully as has been the establishment of the war economy for the production of armaments.

Moreover, only in union, as we know from the experience of Alexander Hamilton, can the debts of Europe be funded and the credit of Europe restored. And for those who do not mind using their imagination a bit, it may be pointed out that the end of the war will find us in possession of most of the world's gold and with the Johnson act as a barrier to its useful employment. Perhaps then we shall say that whereas loans are prohibited to the governments that defaulted on their debts in the last war, the United States of Europe is a new government, without a sinful past, with a hopeful future, and backed by the best assets that exist in the world. For surely we shall wish the United States of Europe very well, and desire its success, and find in its strength and its prosperity a sure guaranty of our own security and of the way of life to which this nation is dedicated.

Off The Record

By Ed Reed

"I've been hanging around here hoping mine might leave me for a career."

Text Of MacLeish Address At Library Dedication

Following is the text of an address by Archibald MacLeish, Librarian of Congress, on the occasion of the dedication of the library at Hyde Park, N. Y., which will house President Roosevelt's private and official papers:

THERE ARE THOSE who would say that the Librarian of Congress was an inappropriate speaker on this occasion. There are some indeed who would suggest that the stone he is helping to lay is to a great or shadow of a stone—so far at least as his dearest hopes are concerned—of an altogether different character. For the library which is to be built from this beginning is a library which will include in time all or nearly all the printed records and personal papers of a memorable period in the history of this republic, papers which the Librarian of Congress would be very pleased to have.

With that view of my position here I can sympathize but not agree. I can sympathize with the suggestion that the Librarian of Congress is not the man to lay a stone—so far at least as his dearest hopes are concerned—but I cannot agree that the loss is a disaster. The Librarian of Congress considers it, and rightly considers it, the duty of the Librarian of Congress to lay a stone to the tradition as that tradition is laid down in the manuscripts and the books which make up the visible body of American history. It is the duty of the Librarian of Congress to lay a stone to the tradition as that tradition is laid down in the manuscripts and the books which make up the visible body of American history.

Modern Technique Divides The Material

THERE MAY HAVE been a time when the deposit of essential materials in one library rather than another was a tragic loss. But if there ever was such a time, it was a time which has long since ended. Modern practices of interlibrary loan, and modern techniques of photo-duplication can make the treasures of any American library available to scholars at work in any other.

The unit for scholarly purposes, in other words, is no longer the individual library but libraries as a whole. And the acquisitiveness of librarians, or ought to change, accordingly. Librarians no longer torture themselves with thoughts of an imaginary and impossible "completeness" which no library ever has attained or ever will. They no longer encourage in themselves those jealousies of the collector which regard not the usefulness of the thing possessed but the fact of its possession.

They consider other and more generous purposes. They consider how the total resources of all the libraries of this republic can be made adequate to the needs of American scholarship. They consider how essential materials of scholarship, now wallowed off behind the new Chinese Wall of state-taught ignorance, state-taught intolerance, and state-taught hate, can be saved for the free inquiry of scholars in those countries where scholars are still free. They consider how American libraries can work together to these ends. In the shadow of questions such as these—questions which will not wait indefinitely for an answer—there is little room to grow indignant because a given body of material, however important, is deposited in the State of New York rather than in the District of Columbia.

This Collection Belongs Together

BUT THERE IS also another, and perhaps a better, reason why the Library of Congress has been able to reconcile itself to the laying of this stone. The material which is to be deposited here is Congress's own collection of records, any keeper of books, would wish if he could to set apart as a single and separate collection, no matter where it was placed or in what company. It is material which forms, by the necessities of its nature, a single and homogeneous whole, and material which no librarian would treat in any other manner.

I do not refer to the fact only that this material has a chronological unity of its own nor to the more impressive fact that it has a human center and a human symmetry. The records of a given sequence of years may be altogether lacking in singleness, and the records of a given man, however famous, may be incoherent and chaotic. What distinguishes these records is the fact that they are not merely the papers written in a particular sequence of years, nor the papers written by and to about a particular man, but the papers of Time—the papers which speak of, and speak for, and therefore recreate, a Time which the minds and memories of man can recognize. Scholars talk loosely and easily

Sound Recovery

By Mark Sullivan

Universal Questioning

FOR SOME months America has felt the cheering rise of economic recovery. It is not based on war; it began before the war. Everywhere men ask, is this recovery the real thing? Uneasily they wonder whether it is like the recovery of 1936-37—which came to an end when President Roosevelt condoned the sit-down strike and tried to make the courts subservient. (New Dealers defensively claim that the death of the 1937 recovery was caused by reduction of Government spending. But if that recovery depended on continued Government spending, it was not a true recovery at all.) Men wonder anxiously if the betterment we feel today may end as the 1937 one did—or is the opening phase of a true and lasting recovery, the beginning of a normal cycle of well-being destined to last for several years.

On the answer to that hangs the question whether America shall keep its form of government and society, or fall into the authoritarian form which abroad has been spreading for 22 years—which is now a consolidated territory from the Pacific Ocean to the River Rhine; and which today threatens to overcome by arms every remaining free government in Europe.

America could not bear, under several years more of the semipermanent stagnation which since 1929, if nothing else, the mere increase of national debt, if continued, would carry us over the dam. For this judgment we have the endorsement of President Roosevelt, who said, on March 10, 1933—when for a brief period in the early part of his Administration he dedicated himself to recovery—"Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy." (He added, ironically to read now, "We must avoid this danger.")

Fateful Question For America

WHETHER OUR present recovery is real is a question fateful for America. The answer depends on the degree to which we go on with the New Deal, or move away from it.

Let it be said at once, that not all the New Deal is any menace to our form of society and government. Much of the New Deal is an improvement of the American system, long delayed and imperatively needed. This part of the New Deal will be kept no matter what party or shade of opinion is dominant in the next administration. If the Presidential election next year is won by the conservative forces of the country, their first task will be to draw carefully a surgeon's knife through the New Deal, saving that part of it which is sound, and by able administration making it workable.

But some of the New Deal is inimical to the American system.

Hearings Friday On Civil Liberty

Preliminary West Coast hearings of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee will open in Los Angeles Friday, it was announced yesterday. The hearings, called to obtain "formal production of various documents" which the committee has subpoenaed from organizations and individuals, will be presided over by Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah.

Regular hearings, which are expected to involve the Associated Farmers of California, among other groups, are scheduled to begin in December.

WHICH WAY THE WIND BLOWS

Figures on circulation gains are probably more of a source of pride to the newspaper itself than of general interest to the reader and advertiser. Yet these gains do serve to show which way the wind of public favor is blowing.

The Post gained 18,000 circulation in the past year—far more than any other Washington newspaper. The Post gained 28,000 circulation in the past two years—more than the second paper has gained in four.

These remarkable increases in Post circulation are particularly interesting because no premiums or special offers were used to build circulation.

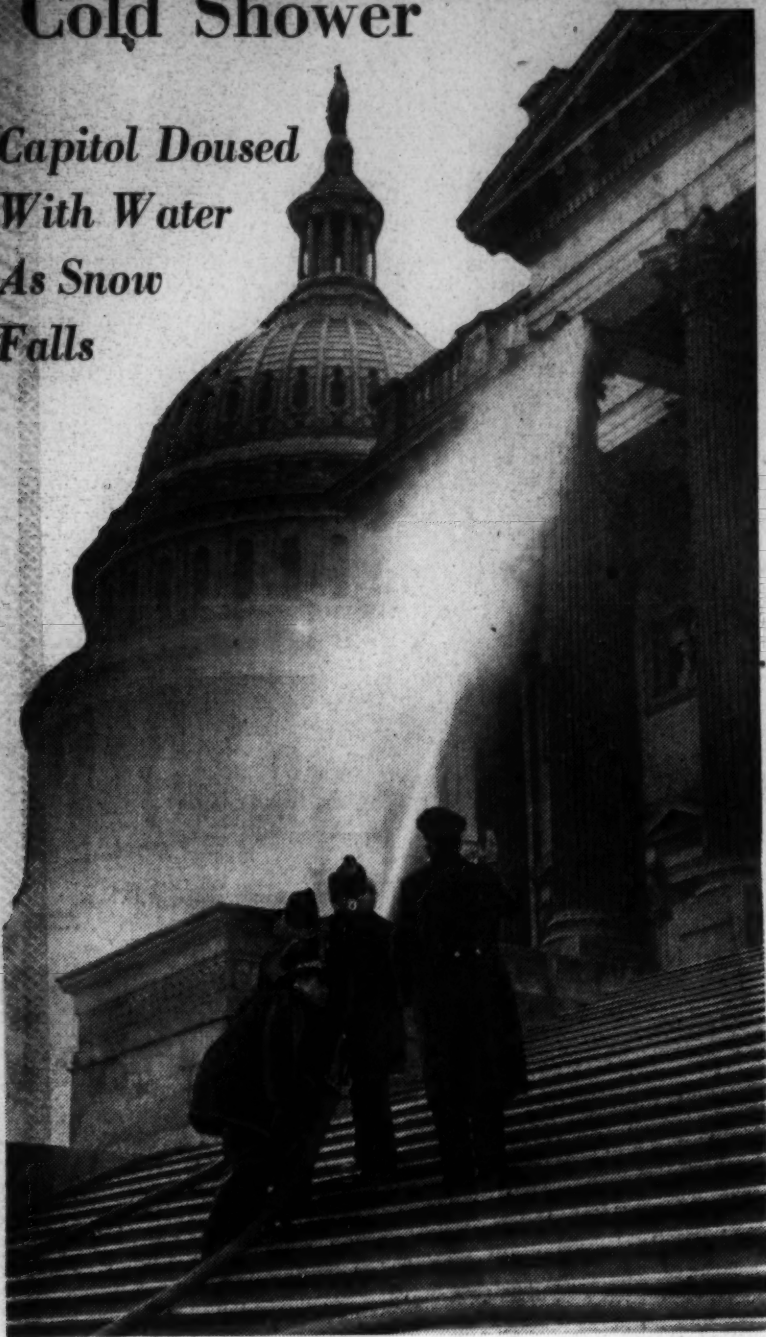

The Post's technique has been to keep improving the newspaper. And the circulation gains show how quickly Washington has responded.

Roosevelt Favors D.C. Mergers

Senator King Says
President Wants
Action; Compromise
Program Is Likely

With encouragement of President Roosevelt, District leaders in the House and Senate appeared last night to end the controversy over reorganization of Washington's city government by forcing through a compromise at the next session of Congress.

The President told Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee and author of a reorganization plan, that he hoped some scheme for remodeling the District government would be written into law before adjournment.

King said he warned the President at a White House interview yesterday morning that none of the proposed reorganization plans was likely to prove acceptable to all groups at the Capitol.

"Any reorganization to be successful must be a compromise," King said.

Kennedy Would Compromise

Representative Kennedy, of Maryland, one of the earliest Congressional proponents of reorganization and author of another plan, told The Post last night he is "perfectly willing to compromise."

Kennedy insisted, however, that "reorganization doesn't mean a thing unless it results in economy."

Kennedy said he wanted to defer final judgment of the reorganization scheme drafted by Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal until he had had an opportunity to study it. His insistence on economy, however, was seen as forecasting ultimate disapproval, inasmuch as proponents of the Seal plan have been frank to admit it holds little hope of saving taxpayers' money.

For Central Authority

Kennedy, speaking of reorganization in general terms, held that economy with government reform could not be effected without an administrator with enough authority to overcome antagonism to change usually found among department heads who have held their jobs for many years.

"With all respect for the present Commissioners," Kennedy said, "I do not believe in the commission form of government. When the powers of government are split, coordination is usually found to be lacking."

Kennedy characterized the Seal proposal, which would continue the commission form of government, as an admission on the part of the commissioners that there is room for improvement in the District government.

"That shows we are making some progress and alone justifies the money we spent for the Griffenhagen study," he said, observing again that he would leave no time to study the Seal plan until he returns to the Capitol tomorrow.

Additional Powers Urged

Senator King urged that the commissioners be given more authority as contemplated in the Seal plan. He said he was willing to delegate to the commissioners the power to levy taxes, but would leave the final decision on tax matters to the greater authority of Congress.

"To function properly," the Senator said, "the District Commissioners should be given additional powers that would make them virtually legislators as well as administrators. They should have many of the powers that are now held by Congress."

King also said he favored putting all District offices under Civil Service, provided "that every effort should be made to select qualified persons who are bona fide residents of the District to fill local positions."

Interviewed last night over WMAL, Seal said his plan would streamline departments and give more power to the Commissioners, doing away with necessity of Congressional approval for unimportant municipal functions.

Lincoln Park

Opposition to reorganization of the coroner's office under provisions of the Seal plan for streamlining the District Government was voted last night by the Lincoln Park Citizens Association.

The group, meeting at Bryan School, V street between Thirtieth and Fourteenth streets southeast, also went on record opposing merger of the Police Department and the Department of Vehicles and Traffic.

Hearty approval was voiced for proposed establishment of a finance department, President Alfred D. Calvert said.

The association went on record deploring conditions at the Roseade Playground and severely "censured" city officials for neglecting the recreational area.

Chefs Dine On a 'Sonnet'; Reporter Takes 'Thick Steak'

1. GETTING THE LOWDOWN—J. Chabot Smith, Washington Post reporter, interviews Nicholas Marchitelli, chef de cuisine of the Mayflower Hotel. Friends of the chef sat down to a seven-course dinner prepared by him last night for their delight.

By John Chabot Smith.

Post Staff Writer.

The Nation's finest chefs sat down to dinner last night in the Mayflower Hotel, to a dinner prepared for their unique delight. Each of its seven courses was a lyric couplet, and the whole, a gastronomic sonnet. It was a masterpiece in harmonies of taste, served to those for whom the taste of perfect dishes is the principal charm of a dinner.

"Les Amis d'Escoffier," Friends of a celebrated chef who chortled this means to do annual honor to his name, were the diners. Nicholas Marchitelli, chef de cuisine of the Mayflower Hotel, was the creative artist. And, Fred Wiesinger, maitre d'hotel of the Mayflower, set the stage and cued the actors in the epicurean drama.

"Let Us Eschew Politics"

The great ballroom, where thousands have dined and danced, was set with 125 places. Tall red tapers lighted the tables, spread with white damask and set with silver. A train of fern ran down the cloth, and chrysanthemums, and gardenias, red and white, stood in vases.

The diners were serious. White gleamed on their ample chests, not the white waistcoats of the formal dinner, but the white napkins tucked under the chin of the man who eats. The chairman, G. Selmer Fougner, author of gastronomy essays, invited them to refrain from smoking before the coffee and to eschew in their conversation such unpleasant topics as politics.

"Let us," he said, "enjoy our dinner." And to ended the evening's speechmaking, until the coffee and cigars were brought with fine cherry brandy. Then these authorities on cooking and eating complimented Chef Marchitelli on his creation and discussed it in its many details as musicians will discuss a symphony by Beethoven or poets a sonnet by Shakespeare.

For they had tasted carefully. Each course, with its appropriate wine, had been a new adventure for the palate, approached with care and humility. A bite, a meditative roll of the eyes, an appreciative smile, and then, as carefully, another bite. The wine was passed slowly before the nose, to catch its fragrance, then raised high to note the beauty of its color, and then, after an exchange of toasts across the table, gently sipped.

In the kitchen below, Chef Marchitelli was in a very busy seventh heaven. All the cooks in the Mayflower were at his elbow, but they spoiled no broth, for his quick word and guiding hand directed their every move. At his direction the coeur de filet de boeuf deglaze au meuniere, the strong spirits and mixed drinks abuse the palate. The wines were chosen each for its excellence, for the harmony of its taste with the course it accompanied, and for its place in the harmony of the five wines and the brandy of the dinner.

A Career Is Crowned

To cook so fine a dinner for such discriminating palates was the crown of a glorious career; and Marchitelli beamed. But if anything had gone wrong! . . . He never rested a moment.

A half hour before the soup was to come the guests began to stimulate their appetites. Five light "aperitif" wines and more than 30 appetizers, caviar, pickled herring, anchovy, mussels, oysters, delicate patties were arranged on tables at one end of the ballroom. Snaps and birds moulded in ice.

The guests were tall and short, old and young, and not all portly. Yet a general triangular build, ample proportions above small feet, bespoke long familiarity with the many and extensive delights of the table. Most were chefs, some were their guests; all were epicures, and none tasted an anchovy without admiring its sauce. Of cocktails there were none; strong spirits and mixed drinks abuse the palate. The wines were chosen each for its excellence, for the harmony of its taste with the course it accompanied, and for its place in the harmony of the five wines and the brandy of the dinner.

First a dry sherry with the soup, whose name approximately translated would be "consomme of birds with little tails, Viennese, with warm crusts, Russian emperor." Then terrapin, "White House," with a dry wine from the Rhine. Third, a red Bordeaux wine, with "heart of beefsteak, charms-meursault, epicurean lettuce, artichokes; potatoes Sarah Bernhardt." A pink sherbet, named Alsatian, followed, and then "roast quail, boned and stuffed with truffles, triple-dry peaches, and salad in season of famous taste." With this course came a sweet champagne, dated 1928. A very dry red wine, "queen of the vine," followed; then "capricious melons in a basket, and then a sauce of perfumed strawberries, little almond cakes, and strawberry bonbons. Savories, coffee, brandy, "fine champagne" and German cherry brandy came with the cigars.

Hey, Joe! a Ham and—

Course followed course and wine followed wine, and the awed hush of the soup turned to a low murmur with the terrapin, and when the red Bordeaux warmed the diners' tongues talk grew louder. But with no speeches, no Honored Guests, no seating list, no introductions nor resolutions, this strange dinner at first didn't interest the reporter.

And the reporter's mouth watered. He was neither a chef nor the friend of a chef, and to him food was food and banquets were functions. "But the tang of salt fish had aroused his interest during the half-hour of appetizers; in the first hour of the dinner the warm aroma of chicken consomme struck his nostrils and the unmistakable smell of beefsteak awakened a desire that couldn't be satisfied by watching others eat."

Moreover, he wanted to smoke. So he left the gourmets to their sherbet and looked for a humble "grill," where the waitress shouts your order to a man with a three-ring stove, and a pickle in the slot brings swing music and you can read a paper as you eat.

He ordered a club steak with "potatoes, fried French," and had coffee with his one course because they didn't sell beer, and the paper napkin was just big enough to keep the crumbs on his lap; the steak was three-quarters of an inch thick and the ketchup would have turned Marchitelli's hair gray, but he finished his meal while the chefs were still on their quail.

Law to Curb Syphilis Is Urged Here

Maj. Bascom Johnson,
Of Social Hygiene
Association, Speaks
At Club Meeting

The most modern type of premarital examination law, which 19 States have passed to protect marriage from syphilis, was held up last night as a model for District of Columbia legislation by Maj. Bascom Johnson, of New York, associate director of the American Social Hygiene Association.

Speaking at the Monday Evening Club, he said that such a law, requiring a physician's examination of both bride and bridegroom and including blood test for syphilis, pays dividends in community protection as well as to individuals.

He explained the legislation sought to "protect marriage from the disintegration that comes when one or both of the partners become disabled, protect children from the devastation of congenital syphilis and protect the community from untreated syphilis."

Ray Everett Speaks

Ray H. Everett, director of the D. C. Social Hygiene Society, expressed his belief in "lively public sentiment in the District for high legislation," with efforts for a law from the Health Department, Board of Trade and other organizations. He said his latest information was a bill is being drafted.

"Virginia and Maryland are two of the States which apparently are holding out against this type of law," Maj. Johnson stated.

He said that in connection with the bill now being prepared in Virginia, its sponsors apparently don't want to make a certificate compulsory for the obtaining of a license. He said some fear had been expressed that "love-maddened youth would take the reins in his own hands" and immorality and illegitimacy would result.

Court Relief Is Possible

He pointed out the modern premarital law permits marriage if the syphilis is not infectious, and that an appeal is provided to the court or to health officers for any persons who feel an injustice has been done.

Attempts to evade the marriage laws decrease rapidly, he said. Maj. Johnson pointed out that "1939 has been a big year in social hygiene legislation" with nine States passing premarital examination laws. Similar bills failed to pass in four or five States. Some 30 States have laws, he said.

Dr. James Lewald, vice president of the Monday Evening Club, presided in the absence of the president, Judge Fay Bentley, who was called to Bloomington, Ill., by the injury of her mother.

The club voted for Dr. Lewald to appoint two unofficial observers to attend the Wednesday hearing before the Commissioners on the question of making available reduced-price milk to families on relief and other low income groups.

Our Town Citizens' Interest in Forest Hills Transcends Its Borders

By Christine Sadler

The suburban development of Forest Hills, from a real-estate point of view, lies wholly east of Connecticut avenue and west of Rock Creek Park. But the community spirit of the area extends across the avenue line. There it takes in residents with similar problems, and includes anything connected with Woodrow Wilson High School.

With a beautiful natural setting, forests and hills and many charming homes, the area is one of the choice residential spots of the District.

"But, as I see it, we are just embattled home-owners, forever fighting the encroachments of commercialism," Leslie Boudinot Wright, president of the Forest Hills Citizens Association, declared yesterday.

Wrights in Area 23 Years

"We have been unable to keep Connecticut avenue attractive and we have to maintain eternal vigilance to keep our trees, to have any say-so about the streets, and to get the promise of a playground."

The Wrights moved to the area 23 years ago, before it had its present name. Before them, had come Joseph Ludwig, who lives just across Thirtieth street from them; Dr. H. C. Dickinson, and Col. Lawrence Crawford.

"We turned into Albemarle street and came down a country road to find this place," Pierce Shoemaker was still living and owned much of the area. Joe Gates owned most of the rest of it.

"Mrs. William Breese lives in the old Gates home now, but, of course, it has had much restoration work done on it. The Shoemaker estate was known as Azadia Park. We tried to live our citizens' association called Azadia, but the newer name won out," Mrs. Wright said.

Named After Settler

Gates took its name from the original settler, whose niece married Conrad F. Springer, the florist. The Springer home and hothouses can be seen among the trees by bus passengers on Connecticut avenue.

Due to its historical connection with their locality and its nearness to them, old Pierce lived in Rock Creek Park is a concern of the citizens, who are provoked at the "efforts to get the old mill wheel to turn by building a dam, and then having to rebuild it, and keeping the roads through there blocked off from us for about two

Looking into Forest Hills from Connecticut avenue, near Chesapeake street. Residences are extending from Rock Creek Park to the "commercial zone." Largest portion of homes are hidden in the "hills" visible in the background.

Following Pierce Shoemaker's death his lands were sold and thrown open for subdivision. This was about 12 years ago. George Bryan, who bought most of the acreage, was responsible for the Forest Hills development, which in reality ran only to the east of Thirtieth street—to the park and along Broad Branch road.

Due to the nearness of the Bureau of Standards, many scientists live in Forest Hills. The citizens have begged for another Government development of a somewhat similar nature, believing that to secure it would shut off some of the additional stores and large apartment buildings for Connecticut avenue, and thus help solve their traffic problems.

Two former presidents of the Federation of Citizens Associations live in the area—Dr. George C. Havenner, who has a beautiful home and exceptionally lovely garden at 2912 Albemarle street, and L. A. Carruthers, who has lived on Thirtieth street since 1914. The latter kept bees "until the city grew up to us." He still has his garden and trees and keeps out food for the birds and squirrels.

Mrs. Wright terms Gen. Mason M. Patrick and S. C. Cissell "two of our best loved and most helpful members." "We extended our territory across Connecticut avenue to take in Mr. Cissell, who has lived out this way for many years. Gen. Patrick, who formerly was in command of the Air Corps, always is chairman of the formal dinner we hold each year at the Columbia Country Club," she said.

Former Attorney General Cummings also lives in the area. George Esch, first president of the citizens, lives at 2908 Brandwine street. On Grant road, where lived Dr. Charles Richardson—friend of the Coolidges—is the home of Capt. and Mrs. William D. Chandler. Wilbur LaRoe, Jr., authority on parole, lives at 4600 Linnean avenue and can be counted on for any needed civic work.

Charles Hamel, Charles Bell and E. C. Potter also are listed on the most active citizens' rolls.

"In fact, we can count on almost everyone," Mrs. Wright said. "We never ask the new residents except once. If they want to join we are glad to have them, but we don't insist on a community spirit. When we need something we call the member who is an authority on it—and the response is usually 100 per cent. I don't believe in women being heads of organizations and I accepted only because I knew the men would continue to do the work needed."

"But I will put in a strong good word for the wives of Congressmen who have lived out here, especially Mrs. Wheeler and Mrs. Nye. Without them we would have been much longer getting our schools. When we go to Congress for anything by ourselves the reaction is that we live in Chevy Chase and that Chevy Chase is so well off it needs nothing. Our dinner last year was in honor of Senator and Mrs. Wheeler, they have done so much for us."

Club Seeking Playground

The Forest Hills Garden Club, headed by Mrs. Victor Kelsey, is developing a plot of ground just off Linnean avenue as a "park and rest spot."

"We still are after a small, level playground on which tennis courts can be built. I don't know when we will get them. We have Mrs. Wheeler to thank for the stadium at Woodrow Wilson High School. Through Mr. LeRoe's efforts, the alumni of Princeton University have helped with the library there."

"Only by much pulling did we get that name applied to the school. We had it cinched before the Democrats came into office. Because of the name, the alumni of the University of Virginia gave us a portrait, and many other things have come," Mrs. Wright said.

Student Nurse Finds Gun, Drops It, Is Wounded

Miss Sunny Hoath, pretty Galtier Hospital student, was shot and seriously wounded last night in the latest of an amazing chain of adventures and mishaps that have stalked her since childhood.

The 30-year-old former beauty parlor operator has been principal in two airplane crashes, three auto accidents, one train wreck and a buggy crash. She was once saved from a 21-story plunge when her airplane crashed her by the heels; she was stranded on a ferris wheel for two hours during a storm; a tornado blew her car off the road at Wichita, Kan.

She came through all of them without serious injury, entering a hospital for treatment only once.

Last night's mishap, most un-romantic of the lot, was the most freakish and most serious.

According to Miss Hoath, who lives at 1217 Kennedy street northwest, she had driven up to 2901 Connecticut avenue northwest to visit a friend, Mrs. Harry G. Roberts. On parking her car, she leaped back to pick up a bundle over the seat and discovered a 32-caliber automatic pistol. Frightened, Miss Hoath said, she placed the gun in her purse and went up to her friend's apartment.

The nurse dropped the purse to the kitchen floor as she greeted her hostess, and the gun, loaded with steel-jacketed bullets, went off, a bullet piercing Miss Hoath's thigh. She was rushed to Emergency Hospital.

Miss Hoath said she had never seen the pistol before, and had no idea it was loaded. Nor did she have any idea as to how the weapon got into her car.

Four years ago Miss Hoath sold her beauty shop at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and took a trip around the world. She later came to Galtier Hospital as a student technician, leaving the hospital last August for a rest following an attack of pneumonia.

Adventure first caught up with Miss Hoath at the age of four. She was riding a buggy at Anthony, Kan., and severely cut her tongue in a crash. Twice she escaped unscathed in airplane accidents while riding with a flying circus pilot. She also got off unhurt in a train wreck at Fairbury, Neb.

The first two auto smashups weren't so bad, but in her third tangle with a car at Council Bluffs, she was run over, bringing her into the hospital for the first time.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Thin Girls Should Stop Nibbling if They Would Gain Weight and Improve Figures

TO CHANGE FROM a nervous thin girl to a healthy slim girl, you must make a decided change in your food habits. Instead of nibbling between meals and eating at random, you must pin yourself down to three balanced meals a day.

Nibbling takes away the little appetite you have—and usually without supplying any of the necessary foods. Isabella Jewell, hardworking young movie actress, ate between meals for years in an effort to put on weight. Instead of gaining, she lost steadily and finally got down to a wisp 82 pounds, alarmingly little for a height of 5 feet, 2 inches.

Doctor Stopped Her Nibbling

On her doctor's orders she cut out nibbling and began to concentrate on three good meals a day, plus vitamin and mineral concentrates. By adding fruits, vegetables and milk to her diet (she hadn't been getting any of these) she was better able to assimilate food and in one week she had gained five and one-half pounds. On the improved diet she continued to gain until she had added the 20 pounds she needed.

Eating between meals doesn't refer to drinking milk. If your food capacity is small and you cannot eat a large amount of food at one time, it is an excellent plan to have your milk between meals and before retiring. A glass of milk one-third cream, is the general rule for the gainer, but whole milk will do very nicely. You can gain one pound a week by adding 500 calories to your daily requirements, and you can get 540 calories

Another important rule is to have your meals at a regular time every day. That, of course, goes for everyone. But it especially applies to the thin girls who are apt to lose their appetites completely when they go past the usual meal hour. Missing a meal is serious for the thin girl whose small food capacity prevents her from making up for the missed meal.

Increase Needs Gradually

Begin gradually to increase the amount of food taken at each meal. You will do well to add another piece of bread and a second pat of butter to your usual fare, together with the milk in between meals. Your menus should always be built around the protective foods because weight is gained more easily on simple, nourishing meals. You should have these foods daily:

Milk, fruits, cooked vegetables, a green salad, an egg, whole wheat bread, butter, and baked or broiled meats.

The extra calories for gaining can be supplied in cream soups, sauces, scalloped dishes, plenty of butter and cream, and in simple but nourishing desserts. It is very important that the extra calories be in the form of the easily digested foods which provide the elements necessary to high vitality. Leave the heavy, hard-to-digest foods out of the menu. All fried foods are hard to digest and rich pastries and desserts contribute nothing but calories.

After Stormy Courtship, Couple Agree to Wed; Then, Without Warning, Man Marries Another Girl; Why?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In the late summer of 1938 I met a young man who was here from the Middle West. There was mutual understanding between us from the beginning. He proposed marriage and made plans to visit me at the Christmas season. He was in his senior year at a large university and when his mother heard of his proposed trip to see me, she threatened to withdraw his tuition funds. She did not object to me personally, but to anyone whom she thought would interfere with his college work. He offered to give up his school work if I would marry him then, but I persuaded him that it would be a very unwise thing to do.

In January, his letters stopped coming, and for weeks I had no word from him. Eventually he wrote to say that he had been critically ill, in quarantine, but would try to see me at the Easter season. He never came, and again for three months I had no word from him. Then he wrote to me in July and asked permission to see me, saying that he could explain his long silence and again declaring his love for me. After waiting for some time, I answered his letter and agreed to see him.

He came to see me in September, staying a week. He asked me to marry him then, but I convinced him that this would be detrimental to his school work. His illness had caused him to lose credits, which of necessity had to be made up. However, we made all plans to be married next summer; talked of rentals in his town, cost of furniture, etc. When he left, he put his fraternity ring upon my finger, in lieu of a diamond which he was to bring me at Christmas.

After his return to school, he wrote me every day and sometimes twice, and in each letter he referred to the happiness which would be his when we were married. Three weeks ago, his letters suddenly stopped coming. After two weeks I wrote to his roommate, thinking maybe his roommate was ill. The roommate wrote this week that he had been best man at my fiancé's wedding, three weeks ago, to a home town girl. I had two lovely letters from this boy on the very day he married the girl.

Can you imagine what my feelings are? I can only surmise what prompted his sudden mid-semester marriage. What do you make of it? I read your column every day, so thought maybe you could give me your slant on the situation.

PERPLEXED.

Sensitive Character Yields to Pressure

DEAR PERPLEXED: If there is such a thing as "natural affinity" between two persons, it probably exists between yourself and your former fiancé; but it appears that the very ardor and sensitivity of his temperament were his undoing. I believe that he was unwittingly by a set of circumstances, pressures and stern or canny personalities, all conspiring to defeat his desire and intention to marry you.

There is a possibility, for instance, that his intense emotional need of you drove him for consolation into the company of another girl, and that involuntarily he became involved in an affair with her, so that finally he was trapped into marriage. Or it may have been that the girl he married was chosen for him, and more or less thrust upon him, by his mother—or by both sets of parents, aided and abetted by the girl herself.

However, while one might like to think only the best of the chap, there is no denying the fact that he behaved with utter cowardice in failing to inform you of his marriage. But perhaps the violent conflict between personal aspiration and environmental pressure which beset him from the outset of his meeting with you did so confuse him that finally, in sheer exhaustion, he gave up trying to run his own life—and relinquished the reins, in dull despair.

to those who seemed relentlessly determined to run it for him.

This might explain why he simply didn't bother to try to acquaint you with what was taking place—or why. He may know in his soul that there is no explanation or excuse for it, except his own lack of physical and moral stamina. His love for you may be the greatest spiritual reality of his life, and yet, because of illness, weariness, dependency and opposition, he may have lost the will to fight for its right to expression.

Bride Asks Advice On Entertaining

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Being just married and wanting to keep my husband's love, perhaps you can help me. Entertaining his friends will be one of my problems, since our funds are quite limited, permitting only absolute necessities for serving. Since we have no service plates, would it be correct to use salad plates, in serving a first course, such as tomato juice cocktail or soup?

Also, when entertaining for three, the table seems unbalanced when set. Have you a suggestion as to how that may be remedied? Having no soup spoons, could we use dessert spoons instead? When we have only a few guests, I have extra dinner plates. Might they be used as service plates?

NEW HOUSEKEEPER.

China and Cutlery Are Inexpensive

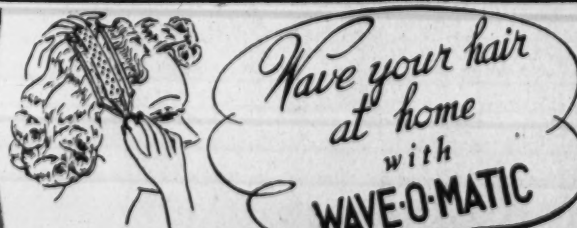

DEAR N. H.: A few dollars, or less, spent at a dime store should solve the problem of service plates and soup spoons. Some form of "service plate," which in most modest households takes the form of ordinary "dinner plates," is necessary for a properly served meal. Cocktail or soup containers are placed on small plates, of the "salad" size, which in turn are placed on the larger plate.

Regulation-size "dessert spoons," which are larger than teaspoons, could be used in place of soup spoons—but these latter can be purchased for as little as 10 cents each at the dime store, so why not stock a supply. Dime stores have an "silver" or "china" department, where you will find the best homes, nowadays, and these stores offer, for around 50 cents each, beautiful copies of famous makes of "service plate." Equal bargains may be found in many department stores.

A balanced table setting for three persons is achieved by placing the outstanding decorative arrangement on the fourth side of the table—whether the board is oblong, rectangular or circular. This is particularly effective if the table is placed against the wall, as it is in many small households.

This Year's Christmas Toys Emphasize Peace, Show Scientific Influence; Dolls Popular;

New York, Nov. 20. ONE OF MY ANNUAL treats is to preview the vast array of Christmas toys now going into the stores for Jane and Junior, and this year it is a happier sight than usual. The toy boys got together and set up an embargo of their own—and the new playthings stress the good things and pleasant times of peace. The war motive is almost absent, which is certainly as it should be. The little things will grow into reality all too soon.

The accent seems to be on things that interpret our ways of life. For little boys the trend in mechanical and scientific things goes even further than ever before. In addition to the radio and other electrical toys and the inevitable print-shops, there is even a miniature medical kit for youngsters who think they want to be doctors, with charts, slips and even a stethoscope that actually works.

For the girls, there are things for the small home—sinks with water that runs, small electric cookers that really cook. And dolls by the dozen, of course—this year apparently running the gamut from Pocahontas up to the Shirley Temple and Deanna Durbin of today. For the style-minded tots, there are more sophisticated glamour dolls (of the Stork Club Type) with a varied and very stylish wardrobe.

And when we consider that the toy men figure that this year's pack will contain toys worth $235,000,000, it's good to realize that so much is being spent to bring joy to the hearts of little children.

The weekly Post recipe contest, of which the theme is Dishes for Serving at Parties for Schoolmates, is limited to high school students. The closing time for entries is noon Saturday.

Recipes must be kitchen-tested, practical and clearly written and given. Oven temperatures and length of time for cooking must be given. All entries must be signed. Only one recipe will be judged from a person. Any student registered in high school is eligible. Any recipe that is suitable for making dishes to serve classmates will be considered. It may be a special kind of cookie or turnover; a hot dish to serve after a skating party; a dessert or cake used for a birthday party or other celebration; a hot bread that is made for a luncheon. The five students who submit the best recipes will receive cookbook prizes.

The Gentler Sex

A Daniel Come To Judgment

WIDESPREAD public support of her defense-of-short-skirts movement has been received by Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey, the famous reformer announced yesterday at her press conference.

"I have been literally swamped with mail and telegrams since I recently announced I would fight to the last ditch the reported efforts of fashion designers to bring back ankle length skirts," said the intrepid founder and president of the Do Something About It League.

"Now here is a sample telegram: 'RETAIN THE EMBARGO ON LONG SKIRTS AND KEEP OUR BOYS AT HOME.'"

I have received exactly 789,341 telegrams of exactly the same wording so you can see just how deeply Americans feel about this matter. I have also received backing for my campaign from the National Association of Letterbugs, The League of Women Rumble Seat Riders, The Amalgamated Men About Town and other organizations too numerous to mention.

Gallant Professor To the Defense

Moreover, I have been especially heartened by the fact that Prof. Byron Byshe Aspic, the only man member of the Do Something About It League, and the Nation's outstanding champion of womanhood has consented to serve as campaign manager of my move.

Historical research on society's efforts to enslave women, has issued a statement on the short skirt situation which I will now read to you. It begins with a little poem: "Our forefathers fought for the freedom of the seas, Their granddaughters fight for the freedom of the knees."

"Shortly after the World War, the French government, alarmed by the loss of trade to France by the American short skirt movement, convened the dress trades of France and suggested that skirts be lengthened so more goods could be used. As this mandate was immediately backed by the reactionary knock-kneed, bow-legged feminine element throughout the world, the future indeed looked dark for Miss America. But in the zero hour of her anguish aid came from an unexpected quarter. The silk stocking manufacturers of America agreed to lengthen the hose as fast as women raised the skirt.

Prof. Aspic

"Heartened by this aid, American womanhood bade defiance to foreign dictators and transferred the center of the world from Quai d'Orsay to Sixth Avenue, adopted the Seminoles' famous reply, 'We'll swim the sea of slaughter till we sink beneath the wave,' and proceeded to cut, cut, cut. Time marches on and history repeats itself."

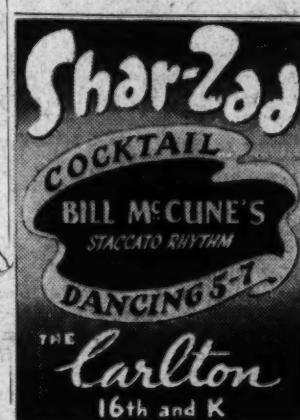

Noted Esthete And Social Lion

"Now I consider that," said Mrs. DeGoofey, "a masterly appraisal of the situation. And, of course, as you know, Prof. Aspic is a seasoned campaigner in behalf of womanhood. He led the movement several years ago to induce men to attend tates, also one to overcome masculine prejudices against salads. He has spoken widely in behalf of the Women's League For Keeping on Hats in Theaters, the Association for Permitting Women to Watch Building Excavations, the Society for the Encouragement of Gigolos and numerous other feminine organizations.

Prof. Aspic is also a noted esthete and collector. He has, perhaps, the world's largest collection of dried persimmon seeds and is the Nation's foremost authority of latter seventh century warming pans. He is very active in Capital social life, being constantly in demand by local hostesses to fill in as an extra man. So great are the social demands upon him that he frequently attends several dinners in one evening."

By the way, Mrs. DeGoofey, said a gossip columnist, "would you care to make any comment on the report that you and Prof. Aspic are—er—that way?"

"I am shocked that such a report should be in circulation," exclaimed Mrs. DeGoofey. "In my position I have to be extremely careful that not a breath of gossip besmirches my fair name. I do hope you are not going to put anything in the paper along this line, but if you should you may quote me as stating emphatically that the relationship between Prof. Aspic and myself is purely platonic."

Ellen Flowerree Makes Her Debut At Tea Given by Uncle, Mr. Hewes

By Hope Ridings Miller

STEPPING OUT in a cloud of white tulle, Miss Ellen Flowerree, of New Orleans, made her bow to society yesterday afternoon at a tea given by her uncle, Clarence Hewes, at his home at 2358 Massachusetts avenue.

Several hundred Capitalites turned out for the event, which marked the first formal debut of the winter and chalked up honors on many accounts. That pretty, blonde Ellen Flowerree is one of the luckiest buds on this year's list because she has Mr. Hewes for an uncle; and that he, in turn, is one of the most fortunate men in Washington—to have such an attractive niece to introduce to Capital society—was the consensus of opinion you could hear rippling from group to group at one of the most successful parties of the season.

MR. HEWES AND HIS NIECE received their long line of guests near the door of the second-floor drawing room. The debutante of the day was a lovely picture in her billowing white tulle frock, fashioned with a three-tiered scalloped skirt, a short jacket and a sprig of silver roses across the fitted bodice. Long white gloves and an old-fashioned bouquet centered with pink roses were further accents for her pretty ensemble. Incidentally, Miss Flowerree wore the same frock recently when she came out in New Orleans at a party given by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Flowerree.

Receiving with the host and his guest of honor yesterday was Mrs. Wallach Merriam, who is chaperoning Miss Flowerree during her Washington stay.

One of a series of parties Mr. Hewes has arranged for his niece, who was feasted at a pre-debut cocktail party for the younger set last week, the reception drew top drawer society in droves. The theory that the debutante's "Uncle Buzzie" knows everybody in Washington seemed to be borne out by the fact that anyone missing in the throng was hardly missed. But the company had a residential, rather than a diplomatic accent, and gathered in more cave-dwellers than I have seen assembled under one roof in many a day.

When I stopped by for my cup of tea, Mrs. Powell Clayton, in a smart black ensemble, was pouring. Mrs. Hiram Bingham, whose brown velvet frock was worn with a matching turban and a sable scarf, presided at the punch bowl and was being kept busy every moment.

Others who assisted during the afternoon were Mrs. Sumner Welles, Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney, Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock and Mme. van Kaathoven.

REFLECTIONS IN A TEA CUP: Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, threading her way through the crowd in the drawing room on her way out and being stopped every step for another greeting. . . Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, just back from a resort vacation, completely surrounded from the minute she entered the room. . . Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt arriving with Mrs. Eldridge Jordan. . . the Portuguese Minister holding a little court of his own in the drawing room, while Mme. de Bianchi was an equally popular guest in the dining room. . . Lady Pascoe-Butter, whose stunning black outfit, set off with a gray fox fur, was one of the prettiest ensembles there, telling friends her plans for the future are most uncertain, and that she may return to England soon. . . her sister, Mrs. Royal T. McKenna, also in black, seeming to know everybody at the party.

Mrs. Patrick Hurley, in a smart green ensemble, chatting with Mrs. Rushmore Patterson, who recently returned to Washington after an extended absence. . . Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis taking turns at talking with their many friends who passed them on the way to the dining room. . . Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, trimly turned out in a black ensemble, one of the most popular guests there. . . the Minister of South Africa, entering the dining room, and being drawn into a group of friends, immediately.

STILL OTHERS THERE: Mrs. George Messersmith, whose bright red frock set off with gold accents, was especially becoming; Mr. and Mrs. William Jennings Price; Mrs. Wilbur Carr, talking with Mrs. George C. Thorpe and her attractive daughter; Mrs. Sol Bloom and Miss Vera Bloom stopping for brief greetings as they made their way through the crowded drawing room, leaving early in order to get to the theater where their old friend, George Cohan, was the star of the evening.

If you want more names—and if I put them all down they would fill this page—I saw Mrs. William S. Culbertson arriving; Col. and Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheim, who entertained at a dinner party later on their yacht, the Firenze; Mrs. Emil Hurja, who was among their dinner guests; Mr. and Mrs. Carleton Holdrege; Charles Mason Remey, who plans to leave soon for a Florida sojourn; Mrs. Francis Whitten, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Owsley, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grant Meem, Mrs. McCeney Werlich, the Misses Pat. . . Ricardo Alfaro, Wolcott Waggaman, and several hundred others.

Will Take Part In Holiday Whirl

Miss Patricia Uline Hill not only looks well in her riding togs but is an accomplished equestrienne. On Saturday the popular debutante, who attends Goucher College in Baltimore, will be honored at a luncheon to be given at the Congressional Country Club by her mother, Mrs. Uline Hill. She will be presented formally to society at a dance on December 22 given by her grandfather, Migiel J. Uline, and her mother, at the Sulgrave Club. This event, which promises to be one of the outstanding parties on the Christmas calendar, will be followed by a breakfast

Parties Mark Opening of National Play

Chinese Envoy in Smith Box and at Dinner Before Show

Several parties preceded or followed the opening of "Madam, Will You Walk?" the current comedy starring George M. Cohan, that drew a number of social celebrities to the National Theater last night.

The Chinese Ambassador, Dr. Hu-Shih, was in a box party given by Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Smith at the theater and at their dinner before at the Mayflower Hotel. Other guests of the Smiths were Mrs. William O. Douglas, wife of Supreme Court Justice Douglas; the Solicitor General and Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, and Mr. and Mrs. Barnett Nover.

The British Ambassador, Lord Lothian, was among the guests of Col. R. V. Read, British Military Attaché, who entertained at supper following the theater. His party took place in the Shoreham Blue Room. Others in the company were Robert Edmond Jones, celebrated scenic designer, and Mrs. Jones who came down from New York to attend the play; and the British Naval Attaché and Mrs. Curzon-Howe.

George Abell, who escorted Miss Mary Wright to the theater, gathered in a few friends afterward at his apartment on Twentieth street. Among them were Baroness de Rodisco, who have been extensively entertained here the past two weeks.

Nicely studded with social lights was last night's audience. Among those seen in the crowd were the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, who arrived with Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lippmann; Mr. and Mrs. C. Mathews Dick; Robert Sherwood, the noted playwright, who was down from New York especially to attend the performance; Justice and Mrs. Felix Frankfurter; Mrs. Henry D. Flood; Lady Bradford Leslie; Mr. and Mrs. T. Sims Lee; Mrs. Irene Caldwell; Mrs. George T. Sumner; Mr. and Mrs. Horace Smith; Dorsey Fisher; Mrs. William T. Mann and scores of others.

After January 12 the couple will be stationed at Fort Benning, Ga.

Guggenheims Fete De Saint-Quentin

The French Ambassador, Count de Saint-Quentin, was ranking guest at the dinner given last night by Col. and Mrs. Robert Guggenheim aboard their yacht Firenze.

Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Guggenheim, en route south, have been stopping on the yacht for several days. They will leave today for their home in Charleston, S. C.

Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone Is One Of Washington's Busiest Women

THOUGH IT takes nothing less than a European war to provide some members of Capital society with an occupation other than that of going to parties, there are many others who have always been so busy that they don't find the days long enough. One of them is Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, another in our series on Washington women who accomplish things. Her time has long been taken up with charity work, social duties, and her favorite avocation, painting.

IT WASN'T UNTIL her children grew up and went to college that Mrs. Stone found time to put brush to paper. Except for a few black and white drawings made at school as a young lady, she had never done any work of this kind before.

This was in New York, when Justice Stone was settling down to private practice and his energetic wife saw days and days of uninterrupted leisure ahead of her. But one day Calvin Coolidge summoned the distinguished lawyer to Washington to serve on the Supreme Court, and since then Mrs. Stone has been so busy that she puts her painting away during the winter.

SUMMER CANNOT come too soon for her, however. Her easel and paint brushes are the first things she unpacks when she and her husband have finally managed to get away from it all. Last summer, when they arrived at Glacier National Park for a visit, Mrs. Stone was painting five minutes after they got there.

Most summers the couple spend at their home on Isle au Haut, Me., and practically every morning Mrs. Stone sails forth in quest of a landscape. She does more of these than anything else, and entirely in watercolors. She paints an occasional still life on rainy days when the weather is too bad for outdoors. Their island is the farthest point of land from shore in the Penobscot Bay group.

VISITORS to the attractive Stone residence on Wyoming avenue will not see any of Mrs. Stone's pictures unless they go downstairs, as she has hung none in the living or dining rooms. Some she gives friends and relatives, but has never made an effort to sell any as she believes it unfair to compete with young artists who really need the money.

The Justice encourages his wife in her favorite activity and is always saying, "But why don't you paint more?" Social duties, however, are the least of the activities which keep Mrs. Stone too busy in the winter. She is her own housekeeper and believes it takes seven mornings a week to keep her home running smoothly. In addition she puts in hours of work for the Instructive Visiting Nurses' Society, of which she is president, and the Council of Social Agencies. Mrs. Stone believes that even a part-time resident of a community should share in its responsibilities, no matter what the demands on her time.

TWO SEASONS AGO Mrs. Stone was honored by a request from the directors of the Corcoran Art Gallery to show some of her paintings. In the exhibit were 24 landscapes of scenes from Maine to Mexico.

In addition to her work as a painter and for charity, Mrs. Stone has many other interests. She plays the piano, and with the modesty so characteristic of her, maintains that this is only for her own amusement.

She and husband-to-be first met when she was exactly a day-and-a-half-old and Justice Stone, then a small boy, arrived with his parents for a call to congratulate her. They were neighbors in Chesterfield, N. H.

Mrs. Roosevelt's Christmas Shopping Nearly Completed

First Lady Recommends That Refugee Relief Be Consolidated Under Hoover; She Will Leave for Warm Springs Today

Mrs. Roosevelt evidently has heard the widespread warning, "Do your Christmas shopping early—it may be tomorrow." Her Santa Claus buying is just about finished. A very few more purchases, and she will be through, she said at her press conference yesterday.

The First Lady hasn't the foggiest idea how large her Christmas list is, and she hopes she never finds out. Truth is, she hasn't a list at all, but rather a card catalogue that for a number of years has kept tabs on who is to receive a gift and what has been given each Christmas.

Incidentally, she mentioned that she does most of her Christmas shopping in New York rather than in Washington because she has more time when she is there. "Every minute" here is devoted to appointments and her other duties as First Lady, she said.

The subject of Yuletide presents was sandwiched in between discussions that touched on a number of topics, including plans for Thanksgiving; suggestions for a consolidated refugee agency headed by Herbert Hoover, and the question of whether a mother can view her children's opinions in an objective light.

Favors Consolidation Of Refugee Agencies

Mrs. Roosevelt put her stamp of approval of the plan now under way to consolidate all organizations for help to refugees. She even went so far as to say that no one in America was better prepared to head such an agency than Herbert Hoover, since he has had so much experience in that field. She believes a coordination of the various refugee setups is desirable because financial appeals could be made on one basis and overhead expenses could be cut. Later, the Government might well assume some financial responsibility in running the agency, she believes.

The question of whether a mother can view objectively opinions of her children when they disagree with her came up when a reporter asked Mrs. Roosevelt, in listening to her son, Elliott, talk over the radio, she could take, or leave, his opinions very much as she would those of anyone else.

In answer, Mrs. Roosevelt said she tried to. She said further that all her boys left for boarding school at an early age; that they came under influences other than hers when they were very young; and that she never had expected them to agree with her on anything. In conclusion, she added all her children "are individuals—whatever else they may be," and that she had seen them go through "many phases."

Leaving Today For Warm Springs

Mrs. Roosevelt will accompany the President to Warm Springs, Ga., today and will return with him on Sunday. They will have Thanksgiving dinner, as usual, at the Warm Springs Foundation headquarters. None of the

Mrs. H. W. Wiley, Charter Member, Heads National Woman's Party

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Staff Editor.

Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, a member of the National Woman's Party since its inception, was elected as its chairman at the close of the meeting of the executive council held at national headquarters in Alva Belmont House over the week-end. She succeeds the late Mrs. Sarah Thompson Pell who died early in August.

"I feel confident that before the adjournment of the next session of Congress, the equal rights amendment will be brought to the floor of the Senate and the House and thus will come before the people," said Mrs. Wiley. "Ten years ago, when I served as chairman of the council from 1929 to 1932, the goal was remote. Today it seems near. I should not have accepted the chairmanship again had I not felt sure of this."

She pointed to the wage and hour law, raising standards for all workers without discrimination as to sex, as an example of protective legislation benefiting men and women alike. "It now applies to workers under interstate commerce, when it applies to interstate commerce our battle will be won," she said.

Cites Support Of 16 Groups

Mrs. Wiley cited the fact that 16 national women's organizations have endorsed the equal rights amendment as an indication of the sentiment in favor of it as a method for carrying out the principle of equal rights. The principle, she added, has the support of others who have not endorsed the amendment as a method.

"Human rights are the dearest thing we have," she said, "and the Constitution is the safest place to put them. For that reason we feel the only security for equal rights is in the proposed amendment."

Questioned as to whether or not the Woman's Party would support the Presidential candidate of one of the two major parties in 1940, Mrs. Wiley said definitely it would not. The only time this was ever done was in Herbert Hoover's campaign, when his running mate was Senator Charles Curtis, for Vice President. Senator Curtis had introduced the proposed equal rights amendment in many sessions of Congress and the party threw its whole support back of him for that reason.

She Was Picket At White House

Mrs. Wiley has the distinction of having been one of the members of the Woman's Party who served a jail sentence for picketing the White House in the campaign for woman suffrage. She is a former president of the District Federation of Women's Clubs and of the Women's City Club, and is now chairman of Indian welfare for the General Federation of Women's Clubs. A few months ago she was given an honorary degree of master of arts by Hanover College, Indiana, for her achievements, including her work in assisting her distinguished husband, the late Dr. Wiley, widely known as the "father" of the pure food law.

The Council of the National Woman's Party has called its national conference for December 16, in Washington.

Mrs. Amy C. Ransome, of California, third vice chairman, has been moved up to second vice chairman and Mrs. Lloyd C. Williams, of New York, named third vice chairman. Mrs. Rebekah S. Greathouse, of Washington, formerly of the council, and Mrs. Marie Moore Forrest, president of the D. C. Branch, were elected to fill vacancies on the national governing body.

The council, which was in session for several days, dealt with many matters, including plans for an intensive campaign on Congress seeking immediate submission to the States of the proposed equal rights amendment guaranteeing to women equal rights with men under law. This campaign the party calls "Women's Fight for a Full Share in Democracy."

Unqualified indorsement was given Senate Resolution 183, sponsored by Senator Burke, of Nebraska, defining the status of the member of the United States on the Inter-American Commission of Women.

Announcement was made that a bronze tablet to the memory of Mrs. Pell will soon be erected in the Black Watch Library in Ticonderoga, N. Y., by a memorial committee organized for this purpose.

Queen Jadwiga Typified Poland's Love Of Freedom, Embassy Counselor Tells Club

"JADWIGA, POLAND'S GREAT QUEEN," the book by Charlotte Hoffman Kellogg (Mrs. Vernon Kellogg), was reviewed yesterday for members of the Guadalupe Society by Witold Wankowicz, counselor of the Polish Embassy.

The Polish counselor likened the sacrifice of the famous queen at a time when her country was harassed by foreign foes to that of the nation today in the cause of peace. The love of freedom and spirit of courage which prompted her sacrifice and characterized Poland now also was responsible for the assistance given by Polish patriots to the colonists at the time of the American Revolution, he said.

Mrs. Gold L. H. Ruggles is president of the Guadalupe Society, which met at the Army and Navy Club.

Mrs. Connelia Kinsella is organist and director.

Mrs. H. D. Hoffman Talks on Housing

Housing is one of the most pressing and important of community problems. Mrs. Helen Huey Hoffman told members of the Woman's National Democratic Club at their weekly luncheon yesterday at the clubhouse, 1526 New Hampshire avenue.

"Communities are studying their schools, their public health, their recreation and their traffic problems. All these matters are related to housing, for the movements of population depend to some degree on whether the town has good, convenient schools, health protection playgrounds and good highways," she said.

Women should be concerned, said Mrs. Hoffman, in what affects the town, affects their homes, their families, their pocketbooks, their taxes and the future of their children. She urged that women assume their rightful place in better town housekeeping.

Trip to Redskin, Giant Game Awaits Grid Contest Victor

Five Pairs of Tickets for Battle in New York Will Go to Winning Contestants; New Rules Will Govern This Week's Contest

Two railway tickets to New York City and five pairs of tickets to the game between the Washington Redskins and the New York Giants for the National Professional Football League's Eastern division championship are offered this week by The Washington Post as the finale to its 16-week-old grid selecting contest.

Seven persons with only two errors in last week's contest won free tickets to the George Washington-Bucknell game, to be played Saturday in Griffith Stadium. Under provisions of a new set of rules there will be but five winners in the tenth and last week of the selecting game in which thousands of prognosticators have tested their skill.

The prizes this week:

To the winner—A pair of round trip tickets on the "football special" train which will be run to New York for the Redskin-Giant game Sunday, December 3, and a pair of free tickets to the game.

To the runners-up—A pair of free tickets to the Eastern division championship battle in New York.

And now about those new rules—this week the "score" column on the blank below, which lists the 19 outstanding collegiate football games of the week-end, will tell the tale.

Entrants in this week's contest must write in the scores—that is, their predictions of the actual scores of the games. Mere indication of your choice of the winner will be only half the picture. And if you think it will be a tie game, indicate the score of the tie.

Only one entry blank per person will be accepted. It is not necessary to use the blank below, however, for any reasonable facsimile will do. Main object is to write in the scores and send your entry by mail to the Contest Editor of The Post before the deadline, Friday, 11:01 p. m. of this week. No one at The Post is authorized to accept entries—they must be mailed and reach The Post offices before Sunday at 5 p. m.

Rose L. Beale, 1817 Webster street northwest, Bill Fielding, 1324 Monroe street northwest; N. M. Schmuckler, 5112 Forty-fourth street northwest; J. M. Collins, Mount Vernon Estate, Va.; Dillard C. Rogers, 4404 Fourteenth street northwest; Roy Powell, 5147 Sixteenth street northwest; Burris Keys, 1824 I street northwest.

This Morning

Washington's No. 1 baseball fan was 70 years old yesterday. He happens to own the Washington Ball Club but that fact is only incidental to his passion for baseball. On the day that Clark Griffith cannot watch a ball game his desires are imprisoned.

That's why fewer games are postponed in Washington on account of threatening weather than in any other city in the major leagues. Mr. Griffith demands his baseball, daily. That's why Washington is one of the last strongholds against night baseball. Mr. Griffith does not like his baseball at night. He's an old-fashioned baseball fan who associates the game with daylight and sunshine.

In his little stucco office at Griffith Stadium yesterday, they tossed a birthday party for the old gentleman who is locked in a triple tie with Vice President Garner and John L. Lewis for the most luxurious pair of eyebrows in the country. About the flower-bedecked tables they sat, toasting the Washington club owner. His family, his friends, his cronies were there in tribute to the man. Gifts were piled high.

It's about time to present Mr. Griffith in a light other than the too-wide conception of him as a grasping club owner interested chiefly in the profits of his baseball business. That picture is a gross libel of a man his friends revere for his kindness, his generosity and his principles.

POVICH

Many Unheralded Philanthropies

The worst that may be said of the man is that he drives a hard baseball bargain. He is a push-over to put it bluntly, for a child's smile. His publicly unrecorded philanthropies would form a long list. The ball player he may refuse a pay raise he is the first to befriend in illness or in accident. He personally investigates the plight of old and indigent ball players and arranges financial assistance. He it was who put through the pension plan for retired umpires.

A widow and two children were evicted from their home by a sheriff's order for nonpayment of rent a few years ago. When charity agencies were slow-moving in the case and a newspaper sought to give its aid, the newspaper was too late. Already comfortably housed in Griffith's own home was the little family. A month later, Griffith used his offices to bring the mother a Government job, a small house had been rented in her name and the realty company was billing Mr. Griffith for the rent.

Griffith, too, had known poverty. He was the child of hardy frontier folks who had journeyed by covered wagon to Indian Territory now known as Southwest Missouri. Fatherless at an early age, it was the boy Griffith who more often than not provided the family larder with his skill with the old musket his dad had used to hunt for the market.

'Old Fox' Came Back as a Star Pitcher

When their little Clear Creek, Mo., farm could not sustain the growing Griffith household, Mother Griffith and her brood moved back to Bloomington, Ill., whence they had begun their Westward trek. The schooling of young Clark Griffith stopped at 18 when he discovered that he had baseball talents for which teams would pay.

In baseball, he came up the hard way. The Chicago Cubs turned him back to the minors. They said he was too small, did not have enough speed for a pitcher and he came back to the Cubs to be a star pitcher. They were Pop Anson's Colts, then. Still Griffith had little speed on the ball, but he needed little. What he did have was control and a baffling curve and a knowledge of the batters' weaknesses and an annoying habit of making the hitter swing at bad balls.

He was a star in the National League when he decided to risk his security by forming a rival big league. With Ban Johnson and Charley Comiskey he formed the American League in 1901 and as his reward was named manager of the Chicago White Sox. As manager, he was an immediate success, winning the first American League pennant race. That year, too, he was the league's leading pitcher with 24 victories and 7 defeats.

Twenty-eight years ago he came to Washington—as manager in 1912 and then, in 1920, as president of the club. It was Griffith who sounded the knell of the old refrain, "Washington, first in peace, first in war—and last in the American League." Never better than sixth had a Washington team finished before Griffith took over. Four times they were eighth, five times seventh in the 10 years before Griffith. In his first season in Washington, Griffith produced a second-place club and repeated the following season.

Not generally known is the fact that under Clark Griffith's stewardship, Washington has averaged the second-best baseball in the American League. For the past 27 years, only the New York Yankees have given their patrons better baseball. Three times, since 1912, Washington teams have won pennants. During the 11-year stretch from 1922 to 1933 Griffith was always a first-division team.

We just thought you'd like to know about this.

Washington Site of Game October 19

Gobblers Announce Complete Schedule; V. M. I. Booked for Thanksgiving Game

By The Associated Press

Blacksburg, Va., Nov. 20.—Virginia Tech's 1940 football schedule lists two new opponents, Catawba College, of Salisbury, N. C., to be met in the opening game at Blacksburg, September 21, and Georgetown University, booked for a mid-season game in Washington, D. C., October 19.

The game with the Hoyas is the first under a two-year contract, which will bring Georgetown's strong eleven to Blacksburg for a game October 4, 1941.

The schedule:

September 28—Marshall College, at Huntington, W. Va.

October 12—William and Mary, at Richmond, Va.

October 19—Georgetown, at Washington, D. C.

October 26—Washington and Lee, at Lynchburg, Va.

November 9—Furman, at Greenville, S. C.

November 16—Center, at Danville or Louisville, Ky.

Thanksgiving—V. M. I. at Roanoke.

Hoyas' Schedule Nearly Complete

The booking of Virginia Poly, which is to replace Bucknell, the Georgetown University football card for next fall is nearly completed, it was learned reliably last night.

From a source close to the Hilltop came the report that V. P. I. will be one of two newcomers to the G. U. schedule. The other reputedly is Gettysburg College, a tough "little" Pennsylvania school which best Bucknell this season.

In addition Georgetown is expected to meet West Virginia, George Washington, Maryland, New York University and Syracuse.

Kennedy to Seek Government Board To Rule Boxing

By The Associated Press

Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, said yesterday he would introduce a bill in the next Congress to create a Federal agency to regulate professional boxing.

Asserting that the fight game seemed to be in "a pretty bad condition," Kennedy said that championship matches apparently were in the control of "one man in New York" and that the outcome of some matches was "known in advance."

"My only interest is to promote cleaner sports and to give a fair opportunity to win to those seeking a national championship," Kennedy said. "Some fighters, although qualified for a championship, never have that opportunity under the present set-up."

He said he had learned that one heavyweight champion had contributed 5 per cent of his earnings to another in the same class because the second man had "made it possible for him to get into championship circles." He did not name the men.

Lawrence, Kans., Nov. 20 (AP)—Dr. James Naismith, 78, inventor of basketball, who suffered a cerebral hemorrhage last night, improved greatly today and now is past the critical stage.

"Unless he suffers an unexpected relapse his chances for complete recovery are good," his physician said.

Syracuse Back Who Troubled Hoyas Feared by Terps

William (Bill) Shek, speedy junior halfback of the Syracuse eleven which meets Maryland at College Park Thursday morning at 11 o'clock. A shifty and powerful runner, Shek proved troublesome to Georgetown as Syracuse tied the Hoyas, 13-13 last month to put the only mar on their two-year undefeated record. Shek is 22 years old, weighs 180 pounds and hails from Stratford, Conn.

Maryland U. Underdog in Syracuse Game

The University of Maryland eleven will end one of its most unsuccessful and perhaps its most luckless football campaigns with Syracuse at College Park Thursday morning. The turkey day (?) contest will begin at 11 a. m.

Although never disgraced, the Terps have dropped six consecutive games by margins of one touchdown or more and will be underdogs against the big Orange which last week upset Colgate.

Syracuse, you will remember, came within inches of terminating Georgetown University's great winning streak last month at Blacksburg. The New Yorkers, with far greater manpower than the Hoyas, led their visitors, 13-6, late in the last quarter. Only a sudden 70-yard scoring dash by Lou Ghecas and the ensuing crucial extra point by Joe McFadden enabled Georgetown to tie the score.

Syracuse, coached by Ossie Solem who succeeded Vic Hanson last year and won the support of all true Syracuse alumni by breaking the Colgate "jinx," is nearing the end of a mediocre season. That 7-0 victory over Colgate last week is the

Texas Aggies Gain Nation's Top Rating

Lone Star Warriors Displace Tennessee at Top Weekly List; Cornell Riding in Third Place; Southern Calif. Ranked Fourth

By The Associated Press

New York, Nov. 20.—Driving past a Tennessee team which had a hard time protecting its winning streak against long-shot Vanderbilt, Texas Aggies gained the top spot in the nation's college football power in the Nation.

After four straight weeks in the driver's seat, the Vols were dropped into second place in the season's sixth Associated Press ranking poll.

At the same time the Aggies, a team which Coach Homer Norton converted from a Southwest Conference also-ran into a club only one game away from a perfect season, drew 38 first-place votes, 37 seconds and 17 thirds on 110 ballots for a total of 963 points.

That was enough to beat out Tennessee by 65 points, and even the Vols were hard pressed to hold second. Roaring up behind them with a 35-6 scalp of Dartmouth's Indians came unbeaten and untied Cornell, whose performance was impressive enough to earn 885 points, only 33 less than Tennessee and 101 more than Southern California, which had been third a week ago.

Thus the standings find the three top-flight all-winning teams at the head of the list, followed by Southern Cal and Tulane, each tied once, and then in order by five teams, each of which has been defeated once.

Ohio State, which lost by 9 points to Cornell but is out front in the Big Ten race; Notre Dame, which lost a one-pointer to Iowa; Duke, which blasted North Carolina out of the unbeaten division and out of the first ten, thus atoning for its one-point loss to Pitt; Iowa, which

District Inter-High Title Game Thursday on Central Grid

Kick-Off Set For 10 A.M.; Site Changed

Eastern and Western Foes in 1st Playoff Of Modern Series; Meeting Is Peaceful

By Bill Burnett

Come rain or shine, the 1939 public school football championship will be decided Thanksgiving morning at Central Stadium when Western, whose best effort in the modern series has been a couple of ties for the crown, meets Eastern, which won the title in 1937. The kickoff will be at 10 a. m., leaving a whole afternoon for turkey day dinners.

Athletic council members and representatives of the schools which earned their way into the crucial fracas last Friday, met yesterday over luncheon and set time, place, etc. And the meeting, at which Western's demand that Eastern concede the championship was expected to be presented, ran its course in a spirit of "sweetness and light." No such demand was even considered.

Expect 10,000

Thus, with the two schools content to settle the '39 champ on the playing field, preparations for the seating of at least 10,000 spectators and final workouts of the teams was all that remained of the series. Roosevelt and Wilson, third and fourth place elevens in the Western section, come to grips today at Roosevelt Stadium, but the game will be played purely for the fun of it. The only change in the standing it could bring about would be Western's pulling the Riders into a last-place tie instead of holding that spot alone.

The Western-Eastern duel will again bring together the pair of stellar gridmen whose fistic clash two weeks ago almost precipitated a "riot" such as caused the cancellation of the 1934 football series. Jack Hillery, as efficient a schoolboy quarterback and ball-carrier as one can find, will be meeting Eastern's Bob Pieri on his jaunts through right tackle and anything can happen.

Leather-lugging for the respective teams will hinge on Western's George Barnes, who almost single-handedly whipped Central; Hillery, Buck Herlihy, Eddie Iglesias, and Bobby Snow. Eastern, with one of the most effective lines in the series, will throw such light backs as Francis Hallama, Paul Cahill, Ray Soo, Buddy Yocum and Jack Teague at the Raiders.

Devitt, Bulls Meet

Second only to the public school title this week will be the annual clash of Bulls and Devitt Preps either Friday or Saturday. The date is as yet undecided. Though neither team has fared spectacularly this season, another nip-and-tuck battle is almost inevitable. It's the most important game on each school's schedule.

Numerous scholastic teams, headed by Central's deposed inter-high champs, take their search for grid honors out of town. The Mount Pleasanters meet Woodrow Wilson High, of Portsmouth, Va., Thursday. Friends School six-man team fares forth to meet Locust Valley Prep, of Long Island, Saturday, and Georgetown Prep has a Thanksgiving Day engagement at Iona School, of New Rochelle, N. J. Gonzaga travels to Petersburg (Va.) High, also for a turkey day clash.

Easily the highlight of closing competition in nearby Virginia will be the annual gridiron war between Washington-Lee High, winners of nine games to date, and the forces of George Washington High, of Alexandria. The game is slated for Municipal Stadium in Alexandria on Thursday, starting at 10 a. m.

Navy Back Hurt During Practice

started the season at left end, has been shifted to the blocking back group. Clarence Justice, end, also has been used at the spot.

All the other incidents, however, were on the other side of the ledger. Emmett Wood, outstanding ground gainer last year, who was hurt in the Dartmouth game, and re-hurt last week, has made fine progress and appeared in almost prime shape today, going through the whole practice session, and big Cliff Lenz, also is much improved.

While neither will star against Princeton, they are both likely to get in the game at some point and into stride for the Army game.

Tom McGrath, 215-pound left guard, is another of the injured who has made marked improvement over the week-end, and who will be used against the Tigers. However, Joe Sliwka, sophomore from western Pennsylvania, has been doing fine work in the spot, and will probably start.

Maj. Larson, head coach, said today that while he would make every effort to get ready for the Princeton game and use his whole strength in that contest, he was also working this week for the Army game and never forgetting it for a minute.

Army, Idle a Week, Rencared With Rest

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 20 (AP).—With no game on Army's schedule this week, Coach Bill Wood allowed most of the starting team to rest today and released the rest of the squad early in order to see motion pictures of Saturday's tie game with Penn State. None of the players was injured severely enough to keep him on the sidelines more than a day or two, but a number of them received painful bruises.

Preparations for the Navy game, December 2, will begin in earnest tomorrow.

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Nov. 20.—Promoters of the Sugar, Orange and Cotton Bowl games could not find a better club to represent the East than Georgetown University, which ended its second undefeated season last Saturday by rolling over N. Y. U.

The club, coached by Jack Hagerty, who learned his football under Lou Little and quarterbacked the New York Giants, hasn't lost a game since Frank Dobson's Maryland team beat it in 1937 by one touchdown. It has perhaps the highest scholastic standing of any team in the country, including those academic fall-guys, the University of Chicago Maroons.

The club is huge, tremendously hard-hitting and surprisingly fast. There are only three seniors on the squad, an end and two fullbacks, with one of the great freshmen teams of the country coming up next year to more than fill their places. There is plenty of ivy in the Georgetown makeup, too, for this is the pre-revolution school's sixty-fifth football team.

Not too much has been heard of them, but there isn't a tougher or more aggressive halfback in the country than Lou Ghecas, a Danbury, Conn., Greek; or a more versatile guard than place-kicking Augie Lio, from Passaic, N. J., and not since Jack Torrance has there been a quicker and more supple-mastodon than Al Blozis, 6-foot-6-inch, 240-pound sophomore tackle from Jersey City, who will be on the next (if any) Olympic team as a shotputter and discus man.

G. U. Would Go Well in Catholic New Orleans

The club's 200-pound reserve center, Allen Matuza, ran 53 yards through the N. Y. U. team Saturday behind what competent critics pronounced the greatest downfield blocking they've ever seen. With 20 seconds left of the Temple game, Lio kicked the field goal which gave his club a victory. Ghecas bullied his way 74 yards through the Syracuse team, with a minute or so to go, to tie the favored New York club, 13-13, the only tie in Georgetown's long streak.

The Catholic Georgetown team would go exceptionally well in Catholic New Orleans, where Sugar Bowl game needs a little fresh dignity this year because of the indictment of several of its silent operators. The club would go equally well in Miami's Orange Bowl, for it was another team from Washington, Catholic U., which played in and won the 1936 Orange Bowl game, and made possible the funds which have improved the Bowl. As for the Cotton Bowl, it could stand the presence of a good strong Eastern club with a football tradition as old as the game.

The seventh annual All-Jewish All-America, as picked annually at this time by a D. C. kosher grid enthusiast named Marcus Mench (who in his enthusiasm sometimes dumps a New Testament spy into the line-up) follows:

Maynard Daniels Next For Murderous Comiskey

Pulverizing Patrick Comiskey's next opponent will be a 22-year-old Marine named Maynard Daniels. They'll meet November 26 in Baltimore. An old Marine whom we shall call Lieut. Col. Heinie Miller tells us that, unless all signs fail, this Daniels is going to be the third United States Marine to win a title. The other two won theirs from the two Jack Dempseys—Gene Tunney from William Harrison Dempsey and Corpl. George Lablanche from Jack Dempsey the nonpareil, whose real name, by the way, was John Kelly.

Lieut. Col. Miller says that the handlers of Daniels, who has knocked out 21 of the 31 men he has faced as a pro, are holding their breath for fear that Bill Daly might pull Comiskey out of the match. They think that Daniels is that much of a cinch. Daniels is a descendant from one of the strangest McCoy-Hatfield stories ever told. His two grandfathers were Cal Montague and Zeke Daniels, old-time bullyboys along the North Carolina coast. To settle the differences between the two families, Cal and Zeke once fought a homeric two-day and two-night flat fight—taking time out only for food and other such functions. With what was left of their mouths at the end, they kissed and made up, and eventually Daniels' son married Montague's daughter.

Marine Miller adds that Daniels' single flaw at the moment is that he leaves his chin open a little too often. Perhaps he should be warned that if he does that on the 30th, Comiskey will reverse that patriotic old message by landing on the Marine and taking the situation well in hand.

Theodorescu Stops Gilley In 6th Round

Scores TKO; Hart Knocks Out Lamar In 8-Round Co-Feature

By Al Hailey

Promoter Goldie Ahearn's latest "ham and egg" fight venture turned into a knockout parade last night at Turner's Arena with Milo Theodorescu, billed as a Rumanian refugee, scoring a technical knockout over a plucky Charley Gilley, of Baltimore, in the co-feature 8-round match.

Al Hart, statuesque Washington Barracks colored heavyweight, fanned Killer Lamar to sleep in the second round, after almost biting the dust himself.

Five Hundred Seventy-three Fans The paying customers numbered a scant 573, and the gate, $631.

Three of the four fights were knockouts.

Gilley, obviously dizzy from an almost ceaseless beating as early as the fifth round, was floored twice in the sixth before Referee Harry Volkman saw fit to stop the business after 2 minutes 55 seconds.

Milo, now a southpaw, now an orthodox fighter, threw lefts into the face of the floundering Baltimorean so often that Gilley hardly had a chance to rise above a low stooping position for the last three rounds.

Before the curtain fell for the Killer he managed to floor Hart for a nine count in the first round with a terrific left hook that brought as much surprise to his face as it did to Hart's when it landed on the latter's jaw.

Killer adopted an apologetic stance at that point, and his chin was as exposed as the torso of Venus de Milo when Hart's cushioned fists finally landed. Lamar roared around the ring displaying a neat glass-eyed stare after Referee Harry Volkman counted him out. Hart weighed 215½, Lamar 182½.

Brookman Wins In a special six-rounder, that was half action and half cheek-to-cheek waltzing, El Brookman, 148, Washington, took an unanimous decision over Frankie Willis, 145, also of Washington.

Art Lind, 154½, Duluth, Minn., who came off the floor to pound out a six-round decision over Al Gilbert, 157, of Washington, last week, won by a technical knockout over Gilbert in 1 minute 15 seconds of the fourth round. His failing fists cut Gilbert under both eyes, and Referee Eddie LaFon stopped the fight after a slashing right cut a nasty gash under Al's left eye.

Brookman to Meet Phil Furr at Arena

El Brookman, who took a unanimous decision over Frankie Willis last night in Turner's Arena, will meet Phil Furr, former "king" of the District welterweights, in an eight-round feature match Monday in the arena.

The Brewers pulled no punches last night as they launched an intra-squad scrimmage at Heurich gymnasium. Coach Mack Posnack, Mike Bloom, Jim Brown, Whitey Wilson, Capt. Arthur Zahn, Kit Carson, George Freilicher, Ben Goldfadden, Carroll Shore, Ralph Bennie and Eddie Boyle are players who will continue driving nightly for Saturday's test.

Eskimos Warm Up to Football As 'Gold Bowl' Game Nears

Sourdough Nuggets and Alaska Bears Prep For Classic Under Northern Lights

By the Associated Press

Juneau, Alaska, Nov. 20.—Fifty young men grunted and heaved tonight beneath the northern lights in preparation for their Gold Bowl game Thursday. It will be Alaska's first football under intercollegiate rules.

Sponsors have selected a field that won't float away as one did last New Year's when the Rev. Bernard Hubbard, the "glacier priest," scheduled his Ice Bowl game at a tiny village 80 miles off the coast. The ice broke up then delayed the game five days.

On the tidal flats below this town of 5,000, two picked teams of former collegians practiced in old uniforms and second-hand equipment supplied by the University of Washington. There was even a bicycle pump to inflate the one football.

Tom Dyer, former professional player, is coaching the Baranov Bears and Conrad Fuhr, who played under Bo McMillan at Geneva College, has the Sourdough Nuggets. Assisting them are Bob DeLong, former University of Washington lineman, and Fred Ayer, one-time Harvard frosh star.

Twenty-three years ago the Sourdoughs and the Eskimos ran over the tide flats of Juneau in catch-as-catch-can exhibition. They did have a football, but there the resemblance to the game largely ended.

Hubbard's Ice Bowl game, matching Santa Clara University Explorers and Eskimo Bucks in padded sealskin, prompted Juneau's spending game, which will benefit the Alaska Tuberculosis Association. Jim O'Neil, promoting the game, estimated that less than half of Alaska's 50,000 residents had ever seen a football game. But his efforts have started Juneau High School talking about a team next year—even a Southeastern Alaska League. Who Juneau would play hasn't been discovered.

The Rev. G. E. Knight will referee the Gold Bowl game. Everybody in Juneau, except maybe the blind, will turn out for the aurora borealis colossus. Kickoff time is advertised for 12:30 p. m., "rain, snow, northern lights or shine."

'Stop Harmon' Is Watchword At Ohio State

Bucks, Pointing for Big Ten Title, Drill For Wolverine Battle

By the Associated Press

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 20.—Ohio State griders, shooting for undisputed possession of the Big Ten crown, today pointed practice for next Saturday's game with Michigan toward preparing for virtually anything in the way of football tricks.

The by-word as Coach Francis A. Schmidt started workouts against Michigan formations was "stop Harmon." Fullback James Langhurst, troubled by a knee injury, may be on the bench during most of the game, but Schmidt believed Sophomore Johnny Hallabrin would be able to fill the fullback spot satisfactorily.

Usually Schmidt has the squad practice under the stadium on wet days, but today he sent it out on the soggy turf to run through plays despite disagreeable weather. Passes and line plays came in for study, always with Michigan defenses in mind.

Coaches had a huddle aimed at figuring out the most effective method of tackling Harmon, fleet touchdown specialist.

Ice Hockey League Makes D. C. Debut Tonight at Riverside

Sea Gulls Play Eagles

D. C. Team Split Even In Opening With Gulls, Rovers in N.Y.; Rough Game Seen

Ice hockey, roughest and fastest indoor sport, makes its "official" debut here tonight when the Washington Eagles play host to the Atlantic City Sea Gulls at 8:30 at Riverside Stadium. Twenty-sixth and D streets northwest.

The Eagles, having split even in their opening two Eastern Amateur League games on a week-end trip to New York, beating the Sea Gulls and losing to the Rovers, will be handicapped as they attempt to score a repeat victory over the visitors.

Ross (Nip) Knipfel, burly young defense man, suffered a knee injury in the game Friday night with the Sea Gulls, and will be lost for several days. He is expected to recuperate in time for the Eagles' return trip to Atlantic City Saturday night.

An unusual angle to tonight's game, which its promoters say will draw a capacity crowd of between 4,500 and 5,000, is centered on the coaches, Mackenzie, of the Eagles, and Bert Corbeau.

Mackenzie coached the Sea Gulls for many years and when he left he recommended Corbeau as his successor. "Thus it is that Mackenzie, while eager to win and prove his ability to local fans, also is desirous that Corbeau bear out the success Mackenzie predicted for him."

Close Game Seen

Tonight's fray, which promises to be as close as the first meeting between the two teams—won by the Eagles, 5-4—is the beginning of a busy and strenuous week for the Washington squad.

Tomorrow night the Eagles journey to Baltimore to engage the Baltimore Orioles, with whom a healthy rivalry is anticipated. Friday night Mackenzie will lead his club against the Jersey City Skeeters at Riverside, and Saturday the week's program for the Eagles ends with their second invasion of Atlantic City in two weeks.

Tickets for the Eagles' games tonight and Friday may be procured at Riverside, and all seats are reserved seats. A 20 per cent deduction is offered to those buying season tickets.

Seasoned Timber

CHAPTER 53

"YOU'RE THE ONLY one in the house who's permitted to have a temper, I suppose," he said insolently.

They were off. It was one of their worst bickerings. Hammer and tongs! Till finally Timothy, with a curse, dragged on his coat and ran heading down the stairs to leave the house.

He flung open the front door. For Heaven's sake, what was this litter of broken glass and splintered wood all over the top step! However did those wire springs, leaning crazily off to one side, come to be—

He remembered, he kicked furiously at the broken wood till he had it in a heap he could make an armful of—carried it around to the woodshed and threw it in. He went back, carried the twisted springs to the back of the house and threw them down on the ground. He went back again, kicked off to one side the biggest pieces of broken glass, picked up the muddled pillows, pulled down the torn blanket and, standing below in the driveway, slung them all in through the front door. Leaving them lying there on the floor of the hall, he strode along to continue his work in his office.

As he walked rapidly past the empty tennis courts, the muscles of his long, wiry legs, which knew of course only by their tension when something was amiss at headquarters, relaxed in a pleasant reaction from the spasmodic violence of running downstairs and kicking angrily; his blood, stirred by his explosion of fury and activity, ran tingling around and around in complicated highways and byways, carrying to the brain a plentiful supply of what it needed for thinking—Timothy's heart continued to ache and burn, but his mind, freed, open, nourished, at ease, began actively to suggest to him the best things to say at the mass meeting and the best way to say them.

DOWNER, who had not for years been in Clifford, came in from New York on the afternoon train that day. He did not even go to the house to see Aunt Lavinia. He stayed less than an hour, only till the so-called Cannon Ball went back to the city. It was long enough.

At the end of the visit, Timothy stood with his brother at the station, listening in astonishment to the bitter telling him, "Don't be such a god-damned fool! Good God, Tim! Haven't you got the sense you were born with? What does shutting them out of a school amount to? Hanging's too good for them!" It was with wonder and consternation that Timothy looked into the hate and fear and unconscious loathing-for-life which contorted the face of this gray-haired stranger to him. He was thinking, "Can this be the little boy who clung to my hand when he was sick and I had to leave him to go out to work?"

The train was there. Downer flung down his cigar and stamped on it hard.

"Good-by, Downer! Good-by!" said Timothy, wringing his hand in a horrified burst of compassion and pain.

The back of the well-cut sack coat was turned to him as Downer scrambled with a nervous tenseness of haste and effort up to the platform of the train. The fine-fibered felt hat was jammed low over the blood-shot, angry, pitiable eyes as he turned to enter the parlor car. The pale, soft, carefully shaven face did not turn back toward Timothy. The door slammed shut behind him.

TIMOTHY HAD gone to bed at once after the mass meeting, but not to sleep. The tension of his two stormy hours on the platform still strung him taut. As long as he could remember to keep up the conscious effort to relax, he was able to lie down on his bed with all his weight; but that effort was constantly interrupted by darting flashes of recollection—a telling word that Downer had launched at just the right moment, to which his answer had been feeble; the expression of Peter Gardner's face when he said, boldly leaning his whole weight on money, "I see some people's feelings are so tender that they're hurt when somebody offers a million dollars. Now mine are—a little—mile tougher than that!" He heard again the answering loud, haw! haw! haw! from the tobacco-chewing Seales Shelf men on the back rows, delighted with humor on their own level, and thought with a darting pang of conscience, "That serves me right for not having made—the last twenty years—more of an effort to get the Seales Shelf children better educated!" The vials of self-blame poured out their poison on everything that came into his head. He could remember nothing but the things he had said badly that would have been irresistible if he had said them well, the vial things he had forgotten to say.

He did not sleep, not once, although he rigorously kept his eyes sealed shut, but the absence of outside stimuli and his prone position slowed his pulse, sent less blood to his brain, dulled and warped his judgment. In the dark, his partial failures took on a looming bulk that shadowed every recollection of the evening from which he had hoped so much. He recurrently found himself rising as a catalogue, his body suspended by wire-taut muscles between three or four points of support, aching from head to foot with the strain.

After an hour or so—after an age or so—he got up to pace back and forth, to take a drink of water. Prowling restlessly around his room, through the starlit darkness, incredulous of what he seemed to see, the hammer-stroke of total astonishment driving out for the instant everything else from his head, the man, as if feeling himself observed, turned his head, looked up, saw Timothy dimly at the window and got quickly to his feet.

It was not a man. It was a tall boy. It was Eli Kemp. For God's sake, what?

Eli was motioning, was calling in a low voice, "Can I come up, Professor Hulme? It's Eli. Are you awake? Can I come up a minute?"

Without waiting for an answer, he pushed open the locked front door and came into the house. Timothy, turning on the electric light in his room, heard the clumsy boy trying to be quiet and falling over his feet. He went to open his door. Not with exasperation, for he could not conceive that anything but a life-and-death emergency had brought the boy there at the hour which at the best was a bureau—his three in the morning. Perhaps his sickly mother was worse—perhaps his worthless father

"But no, as Eli came in, his long horse-face was literally shining. 'I got an idea! I got an idea, Professor Hulme! I was just about crazy! I was so worked up over that meeting, and the 'cademy and everything— you were swell, Professor Hulme, you were simply swell. I heard everybody say, 'goin' out o' Town Hall, that you made that Gardner look like a plugged nickel. Well, I went to bed, but I couldn't get to sleep. I kept thinkin' and thinkin' about the 'cademy—and then I did drop off—I must have, for all of a sudden I thought somebody was holier in at me and I said, 'you want?—and I had the idea! It came to me! I couldn't wait to talk it over with you, so I got dressed and came up to sit on the front step and wait till I heard somebody stirring around in the morning, and when I saw you looking out of the window . . .'

Timothy got back into bed, and pulled the sheet up. "Take a chair, Eli, and let's hear it," he said with skeptical impatience. He thought the boy still halfway in a dream.

But Eli could not sit still. Pacing fast up and down the room, he began to talk.

After ten minutes of such ardent, articulate fluency as was incredible from Eli, Timothy said, not skeptically at all, "Hold on! Let's go into my study and get out some road-maps and the Vermont Register, and some Windward County town reports. By the Lord Almighty, Eli, I believe you've got something!"

IT WAS BLACK NIGHT when they went into the study, turned on the lights and began collecting and heaping up on Timothy's worktable together on the warm greenness of the earth, who were perhaps at that instant turning in each other's arms to look up, cheek against cheek, at all that golden glory in the starry sky.

He leaned faintly against the windowframe, he thought—perhaps not sincerely, yet as sincerely as any sane person ever has that thought—that the one irrevocable pang of death could not but be easier to bear than the recurrence of this obscene humiliating pain.

He tried—brought strength, for his long effort to relax had unstrung the sinews of his conscious will—to bring up some of his usual defenses, he tried to remember even one of those vivid burning pictures of mistakes, failures, opportunities lost, which only the moment before he had been trying to blot out. Nothing came but another kind of vivid burning picture. One intolerable detail of it after another rushed before his inner eye and stood planted, insolent and shameless, to be stared at.

He could not look away. That part of him, intelligence and self-control on which he counted to help him live through such attacks from ambush, had been devitalized by darkness and immobility. He strained to keep up to it for help, but like a man in a nightmare, he could make no sound. The silence of the house closed in around him, setting off against its blackness the raw clarity of his unblinking stare on that leafy woodland marriage-bed under the open sky.

No! No! This was intolerable. There were indignities inflicted by the imagination on self-respect that were not to be borne. Why should they be borne?

As Timothy strained his eyes

through the starlit darkness, incredulous of what he seemed to see, the hammer-stroke of total astonishment driving out for the instant everything else from his head, the man, as if feeling himself observed, turned his head, looked up, saw Timothy dimly at the window and got quickly to his feet.

Ennis Cleared In Slaying of Theft Suspect

A coroner's jury decided yesterday that Detective Sergeant J. E. Ennis shot in self-defense "while attempting to maintain an arrest," when he shot and killed an 18-year-old larceny suspect early Sunday.

The three-hour hearing at the District Morgue was climaxed by the testimony of a woman eyewitness, who contradicted the testimony of Ennis and the three detectives who accompanied him at the time of the shooting. The jury deliberated five minutes.

The detectives—Lieut. Joseph Shimon, Harry H. Britton and Robert J. Maghan—testified that the suspect, John Edward Parran, colored, of the 1200 block Twelfth street northwest, dashed out of a parked car on Kingman place and was caught by Ennis at Kingman place and Q street northwest.

Knife Slashes Reported

They said that Ennis and Parran struggled, both falling to the ground. Parran, they claimed, broke away, but was caught again by Ennis after a chase of one block at Thirteenth and Q streets. In a second tussle Parran, it was alleged, slashed at Ennis twice with a pen-knife, cutting two gashes in his coat above the heart.

Ennis said he stepped back, pulled out his gun and shot from the hip at Parran, who was about five feet away. Parran, he testified, turned as the shot was fired, lunged forward, then ran about 100 feet before dropping to the pavement.

The autopsy revealed that Parran was shot in the back, the bullet entering below his left shoulder and traveling upward into his throat.

The woman eyewitness, Mrs. Katherine Smothers, colored, of 1613 Thirteenth street northwest, testified that she saw the shooting from her third-floor window. She said that she heard men running, came to the window, and saw two men chasing Parran.

She Denies Any Scuffle

According to her version, a man in a light coat, who was more than 30 feet behind Parran, fired a shot that brought the youth down immediately. She said she saw no scuffle.

The coat detectives said Ennis wore was dark gray and possessed two long gashes above the heart.

Parran was sought by police. Shimon testified, in connection with a series of car footings in which Edward Wanzler, 19, colored, of 1419 Cochran street northwest, was involved. Parran was released on parole from the National Training School August 8.

Ennis, 38, has served with the police force for 12 years. He was promoted to be a detective sergeant last July.

U. S. to Set Up Commerce Office In Puerto Rico

To stimulate trade between Puerto Rico and the United States, a district office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce will soon be established at San Juan, with A. Cyril Crilly, a Government career man, as district manager. Secretary of Commerce Hopkins announced yesterday that plans are nearing completion. More than $80,000 in merchandise flowed each way in trade between Puerto Rico and the mainland last year. Crilly, 37, with 13 years' service in the bureau, has made a study of Puerto Rican trade movements. A graduate of Georgetown School of Foreign Service, he has served as foreign commerce officer at Panama, Havana, Lima, Peru and Buenos Aires. Requests from commercial organizations in this country and in Puerto Rico spurred establishment of the new district office.

CRILLY

Charles M. Koonz, 57, unemployed carpenter, of 638 Newton place northwest, was found hanged from the rafters of a garage in the rear of a home in the 1400 block of Newton place yesterday.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald pronounced a verdict of suicide. Police said Koonz came here recently from Pennsylvania in search of work.

A Picture of the Square Dance Is Made

Russians Dare Death to Pray, Says Minister

In the face of exile or death, Russians of all faiths are worshipping secretly in the heart of atheistic Moscow, the Rev. Ivan Neprash, former president of the Russian Baptist Union, last night told the opening meeting of the Sixty-Second District Baptist Convention.

Speaking to more than 400 in First Baptist Church, the minister told how government efforts to exterminate religion had failed to prevent the "spiritually hungry from finding ways to worship."

With open services out of the question because of the rigid government decrees, Muscovites meet in groups as small as ten to worship in secret refuges.

The Rev. Mr. Neprash told how two years ago a group of Baptists met in the attic of a Greek Orthodox church. When it was confiscated, the congregation fled to private homes.

"But always we are afraid of spies," he said. "That the agents of the OGPU have found many victims in their drive against religion was vouched for by the declaration of the minister, 'more than half of the preachers in Moscow have been done away with.'"

Immediate confiscation of the place of worship, with possible exile or "liquidation" awaits those trapped by the secret police, he asserted.

The Rev. Mr. Neprash exhibited posters issued by the government to mock religion. One cartoon showed a Communist working, climbing a ladder to smash with a sledge hammer a group of grotesquely depicted saints.

The convention sermon was delivered by the Rev. M. P. German, pastor of the Bethany Baptist Church. He urged a return to "high-mindedness and conscientiousness" by the individual for a regeneration of the world.

In today's session, the Rev. Edward H. Pruden, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist Church, will deliver an address of welcome to delegates at 10:10 a. m. Reports of convention institutions and standing committees will be heard this afternoon.

The Rev. T. Luther Holcomb, D. D., executive secretary of the Sunday school board, of Nashville, will address the convention tonight.

WPA Will Train 150 Leaders For District in Arts, Crafts

Center For Recreation Instruction
Will Be Opened Today at 1:30
At Lincoln Temple Parish House

A center for training recreation leaders will be opened at 10:30 a. m. today at Lincoln Temple Parish House, 1701 Eleventh street northwest, by Paul Edwards, District administrator of the Works Progress Administration.

Plans for development of a broadened recreational program here make imperative the training of leaders to teach both children and adults arts and crafts, Edwards said yesterday.

Leaders to Be Taught

Mrs. Mary Steele, director of the community project, District WPA, declared her organization desired full community participation in the widening recreational facilities projected for the National Capital.

The program is being developed, she said, "in close co-operation with the District recreational setup." Constructive activities for filling leisure time, Mrs. Steele said, have resulted in reduction of juvenile delinquency.

She added the training center will be used to instruct recreational leaders in puppet making, leather tooling, necktie dyeing, wood-cut making and "simple arts and crafts generally."

150 to Be Trained

Nearly 150 leaders from WPA rolls will be trained in groups through the winter, Mrs. Steele explained.

When their training has been completed, she said, leaders will be given work at various community centers of the city. Most of them worked through the summer at city playgrounds and will have similar duties in warm weather in the future.

Herbert S. Price, WPA director of recreation here, and his staff will have charge of the training program, Mrs. Steele said.

Plan to Drop Street Cars Is Likely to Lose

The petition to abandon street-car service on Butternut street east of Georgia avenue, filed by the Capital Transit Co., probably will be denied by the Public Utilities Commission, it was learned yesterday.

The commission conferred on the proposal but reached no decision. Rerouting of buses on the Connecticut avenue line also was taken under advisement.

Richmond B. Keach, vice chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, said various plans were being studied to speed mass transportation between outlying suburbs and downtown Washington.

Clearing of arteries and boulevards, he continued, by banning parking and unloading of commercial vehicles, is expected to permit faster movement of traffic in rush hours.

Keach emphasized that the recurring proposal to construct subways was not under consideration. Elevated transportation lines, he said, have always been ruled out for aesthetic reasons.

The problem of rapid transportation in the National Capital is complicated by the rapid construction of the city, he stated.

"It's almost impossible to make more streets one way, because streets here are broken by parks and public building sites," officials said.
